FINIS.

To His Honoured Friend,
Arthur Charlet, M.A.

Fellow of Trinity College in OXON.

S I R,

HIS in its several Parts being address'd to my Intimate Acquaintance, desires a Patron of the same Rank; and hath pitch'd on You as the most able to endure, and most ready to oblige by accepting, a greater Trouble than the rest: It is the Defence of the Whole that you must be engag'd in, whilst the others singly are charged only with a part: and in this I have followed the Example of the Antients, who tho' they had one of the Lares to preside over every little Room, yet the whole House was dedicated to some common Guardian: This Distinction proceeded either from a real Inequality of Power in the Protectors, or from the Difference of those Benefits which They were suppos'd to have actually bestowed. As to the former Consideration, every one that knows my Friends, will easily allow, that each singly is sufficient for the whole, tho', by reason of my Imperfections, a great Task. But the latter, Sir, gives You the Preference, and Gratitude forceth me to believe his Power to be greatest, who hath most often, and most signally express'd it: Innumerable private Favours I must acknowledge the same way they were bestow'd, and spare your Modesty and my own; for otherwise it would seem that I thought there was something in my self worth your Notice; or else I must publicly proclaim, that You (which tho' 'tis really your Case, yet very few can boast) are kind and generous without any Prospect of Return: But those which properly relate to the present Occasion, I must beg leave to mention, since Pliny and all agree, hath severely noted as the greatest Ingratitude, not to acknowledge to whom we owe what we have attain'd; and it would argue Stupidity to run wilfully on that Censure, which hath been so justly pass'd, and so much applauded.

You may remember, Sir, how often, when the publick Cares of Your well-managed Office would permit You to retreat, we have retir'd to a Grove, where Quiet spreads all around, and a springing
Ver-

Verdure, and checquer'd Variety to raise the Thoughts, and recreate the Fancy; whilst soft Breezes murmur'd thro' the Trees, which, like our Affections, serv'd only to intermix, but never to shatter or disturb: There I have enjoy'd whatever the Poets could imagine, a free, innocent, and instructive Discourse, such as reform'd my Errors, and encourag'd those Essays which you was pleas'd to think endeavours after Virtue; till then I envied the Happiness of the described Swains, and look'd on Virgil and Theocritus as Disturbers of Mankind, who elaborately describ'd the most perfect and surprizing Beauties, but gave us no Hopes either to see or to enjoy. The Golden Age was their Scene, and 'twas necessary to look beyond Jupiter himself to find any thing innocent or pleasing, and how tedious such a Search must be, every one may imagine, who considers that 'tis very hard to take so large a Prospect, especially when there is nothing but a bare Contemplation to excite, and reward his Diligence. The time, Sir, I found brought back again by your Conversation, and all those Difficulties (τὰ σκληρὰ Θεοκρίτου) which were so even to a Proverb, practically explain'd: so that whatever in this Performance is drawn soft, innocent, and pleasing; is but a Copy from You the Original. This is the Happiness that attends polite Learning, it smooths all the natural Asperities of Humour and Passion, and spreads an obliging Tendernefs thro' the whole Man; and where the Cause is in so eminent a Degree, and the Effect too necessary, what can hinder the Production?

 These are the Reasons that have determin'd my Acknowledgments for former, and given me
 Encouragement to beg a new Obligation, to accept this, and pardon its Defects, will be a very considerable one to,

RAPIN'S Discourse
UPON PASTORALS
In Three PARTS.

Done from the Original LATIN.

O be as short as possible in my Discourse upon the present Subject, I shall not touch upon the Excellency of Poetry in general; nor repeat those high Encomiums, (as that 'tis the most Divine of all Human Arts, and the like) which Plato in his Jour, Aristotle in his Poetica, and other learned Men have copiously insisted on: And this I do that I might more closely and briefly pursue my present Design, which, no doubt will not please every Man; for since I treat of that part of Poetry, which (to use Quintilian's Words) by reason of its Clownishness, is afraid of the Court and City; some may imagine that I follow Nichocavis's Humour, who would paint only the most ugly and deform'd, and those too in the meanest and most frightful Drefs, that real, or fancy'd Poverty could put them in.

For some think that to be a Shepherd is in it self mean, base and sordid; and this I think is the first thing thing that the graver and soberer sort will be ready to object.

But if we consider how honourable that Employment is, our Objectors from that Topick will be easily answer'd: for as Heroick Poems owe their Dignity to the Quality of Heroes, so Pastorals to that of Shepherds.

Now to manifest this, I shall not rely on the Authority of the Fabulous and Heroick Ages, tho' in the former, a God fed Sheep in Thessaly; and in the latter, Hercules the Prince of Heroes, (as Paterculus styles him) graz'd his Herd on Mount Aventine: These Examples, 'tis true, are not convincing, yet they sufficiently show that the Employment of a Shepherd was sometime look'd upon to be such, as in those fabulous times was not altogether unbecoming the Dignity of a Heroe, or the Divinity of a God: which Consideration, if it cannot be of force enough to procure Excellence, yet certainly it may secure it from the Imputation of Baseness, since it was sometime look'd upon as fit for the greatest in Earth or Heaven.

But not to insist on the Authority of Scripture, Sacred Writ tells us, that Jacob and Esau, two great Men, were Shepherds; and Amos, one of the Royal Family, asserts the same of himself, for he was among the Shepherds of Tecua, following that Employment: The like by God's own Appointment prepared Moses for a Scepter, as Philo intimates in his Life, when he tells us, That a Shepherd's Art is a suitable Preparation to a Kingdom; the same he mentions in the Life of Joseph, affirming that the Care a Shepherd hath over his Cattle, very much resembles that which a King hath over his Subjects. The same, Basil in his Homily de S. Mamm. Martyr hath concerning David, who was taken following the Ever great with young ones to feed Israel, for he lays that the Art of feeding and governing are very near a kin, and even Sisters: And upon this Account I suppose 'twas, that Kings amongst the Greeks reckoned the Name of Shepherd one of their greatest Titles, for, if we believe

Part. I. ~~OF THE~~ THE RUSTICALS

believe, Vergil, among the Ancients, the best and bravest warrior, and every body knows that the Phœnix was the most ancient Nation in the World, and the most ancient Nation in the Twelve Tribes, and the most ancient Nation which had a Common Religion, and a Common Law, as Ovid says, Quædam sunt quædamque leges

His own small flock each Senator did keep.

Lucretius mentions an extraordinary Happiness, and as it were Divine in a Shepherd's Life,

Thro' Shepherd's Ease, and their Divine Retreats.

And this is the Reason, I suppose, why the Solitude of the Country, the shady Groves, and Security of that happy Quiet was so grateful to the Muses, for thus Horace represents them,

The Muses that the Country love.

Which Observation was first made by Musæus the Sicyonian in his Epigram upon Venus.

The Rural Muse upon the Mountains feeds.

For sometimes the Country is so ravishing and delightful, that it will melt the Wit and Spirit even in the dullest Clod. And in Taish, amongst so many Heats of Love and Ambition which usually fill our Cities, I cannot see what Retreat, what Consolator is left for a chaste and sober Muse.

And to speak from the very Bottom of my Heart,
(not to mention the Integrity and Innocence of Shepherds, upon which so many have insisted, and so copiously declaimed) methinks he is much more happy in a Wood, than in a City, contemplating this Universe, as his own, and in it the Sun and Stars, the pleasing Meadows, shady Groves, green Banks, stately Trees, flowing Springs, and the wanton Windings of a River, fit Objects for quiet Innocence, than he that with Fire and Sword disturbs the World, and measures his Possessions by the wast that lies about him : Augustus in the remotest East fights for Peace, but how tedious were his Voyages? How troublesome his Marches? How great his Disquiets? What Fears and Hopes distracted his Designs? Whilst Tityrus contented with a little, happy in the Enjoyment of his Love, and at ease under his spreading Beech ;
ver;

Taught Trees to sound his Amaryllis Name.

On the one side Milthaus is forc'd to leave his Country, and Antony on the other ; the one a Shepherd, the other a great Man, in the Commonwealth ; how disagreeable was the Event? The Shepherd could endure himself, and sit down contentedly under his Misfortunes, whilst lost Antony, unable to hold out, and quitting all hopes both for himself and his Queen, became his own barbarous Executioner : Than which sad and deplorable Fall I cannot imagine what could be worse, for certainly nothing is so miserable as a Wretch made so from a flourishing and happy Man ; by which 'tis evident how much we ought to prefer before the Gaiety of a great and shining State, that Idol of the Crowd, the lowly simplicity of a Shepherd's Life : For what is that but a perfect Image of the state of Innocence, of that golden Age, that blessed Time, when Sincerity and Innocence, Peace, Ease, and Plenty inhabited the Plains ?

Take the Poets Description.

*Here Innocence secures a soft Retreat,
A harmless Life, and ign'rant of Deceit,
And free from fears with various sweets encrease,
And all's or'e spread with wings of downy Peace :*

Here

Part I. upon PASTORALS.

*Here Oxen low, here Goats, and purling Streams,
And spreading shades invite to ease Dreams.*

And thus Horace.

*Happy the Man beyond pretence
Such was the State of Innocence, &c.*

And from this Head I think the Dignity of Bucolics is sufficiently cleared, for as much as the Golden Age is to be preferr'd before the Heroick, so much Pastorals must excel Heroick Poems: Yet this is so to be understood, that if we look upon the Majesty and Loftiness of Heroick Poems, it must be confess'd that they justly claim the prehemipence; but if the unaffected neatness, elegant, graceful Smoothness of the Expression, or the polite drefs of a Poem, be considered, then they fall short of Pastorals: For this sort flows with Sweet, Elegant, Neat and Pleasing Facies; as is too evident to every one that hath tasted the sweeter Muses, to need a farther Explication: For 'tis not probable that Affianus Pollio, Cicero, Pavrius, Cornelius Gallus, Men of the finest Wit, and that lived in the most polite Age, or that Augustus Caesar the Prince of the Roman Elegance, as well as of the Common Wealth, should be so extremely taken with Virgil's Bucolics, as that Virgil himself, a Man of such singular Prudence, and so correct a Judgment, should dedicate his Eclogues to those great Persons; unless he had known that there is somewhat more than ordinary Elegance in those sort of Composures, which the Wise perceive, tho' far above the Understanding of the Crowd: Nay if Ludovicus Vivus, a very leamed Man, and admir'd for politer Studies, may be believed, there is somewhat more sublime and excellent in those Pastorals, than the Common sort of Grammarians imagine: This I shall Discourse of in another Place, and now inquire into the Antiquity of Pastorals.

Since

Since Linus, Orpheus; and Eumolpus were famous for their Poems, before the Trojan Wars; those are certainly mistaken, who date Poetry from that Time; I rather incline to their Opinion, who make it as old as the World it self; which Assertion as it ought to be understood of Poetry in general, so especially of Pastoral, which, as Scaliger delivers, was the most antient kind of Poetry, and resulting from the most antient way of Living: Singing first began amongst Shepherds as they fed their Flocks, either by the impulse of Nature, or in Imitation of the Notes of Birds, or the whispering of Trees.

For since the first Men were either Shepherds or Plowmen; and Shepherds, as may be gathered out of Thucydides and Varro, were before the others, they were the first that either invited by their leisure, or (which Lucretius thinks more probable) in Imitation of Birds, began a Tune.

Thro' all the Woods they heard the pleasing noise,
Of chirping Birds, and try'd to frame their Voice,
And imitate, thus Birds instructed Man,
And taught them Songs before their Art began.

In short, 'tis so certain that Verses first began in the Country, that the thing is in it self evident, and this Tibullus very plainly signifies.

First weary at his Plow the labouring Hind
Began rude Words in certain Feet to bind:
His dry Reed first he tun'd at sacred Feasts
To thank the bounteous Gods, and cheer his Guests.

In certain Feet, according to Bern. Cilenius of Verona his Interpretation in set Measures: For Censorinus tells us, that the antient Songs were loose, and not ty'd up to any strict numbers, and afterwards by certain tain Laws and acknowledged Rules were confin'd to such and such Measures : For this is the Method of Nature in all her Works, from imperfect and rude beginnings Things take their first rise, and afterwards by fit and apposite Additions are polish'd, and brought to Perfection : Such were the Verses which heretofore the Italian Shepherds and Plowmen, as Virgil says, sported amongst themselves.

*Italian Clowns from Trojan Lineage sprung,
In sportful mood unpolish'd Numbers sung.*

Lucretius in his Fifth Book de Natura Rerum, says, that Shepherds were first taught by the rushing of soft Breezes amongst the Canes to blow their Reeds, and so by Degrees to put their Songs in Tune.

*For whilst soft Evening Gales blew o'er the Plains
And shook the sounding Reeds, they taught the Swains,
And thus the Pipe was fram'd, and tuneful Reed ;
And whilst the Flocks did then securely feed,
The harmless Shepherds tun'd their Pipes to Love,
And Amaryllis Name fill'd every Grove.*

From all which 'tis very plain that Poetry began in those Days, when Shepherds took up their Employment : To this agrees Donatus in his Life of Virgil, and Pontanus in his Fifth Book of Stars, as appears by these Verses.

*Here underneath a shade by purling Springs
The Shepherds dance, whilst sweet Amyntas sings ;
Thus first the new-found Pipe was tun'd to Love,
And Plowmen taught their Sweet-hearts to the Grove.*

Thus the Fescennine Jests, when they sang Harvest-home, and then too the Grape Gatherers and Reapers Songs began, an elegant Example of which we have have in the Tenth Idyllium of Theocritus.

From this Birth, as it were, of Poetry, Verle began to grow up to greater Matters; for from the common Discourse of Plowmen and Shepherds, first Comedy, that Mistress of a Private Life, next Tragedy, and then Epick Poetry, which is lofty and Heroical arose, this Maximus Tyrinus confirms in his Twenty first Dissertation, where he tells us that Plowmen just coming from their Work, and scarce cleansed from the filth of their Employment, did use to flurt out some sudden and extempore Catches; and from this beginning, Plays were produc'd, and the Stage erected: Thus much concerning the Antiquity, next of the Original of this sort.

About this, learned Men cannot agree, for who was the first Author is not sufficiently understood; Donatus, 'tis true, tells us 'tis proper to the Golden Age, and therefore must needs be the Product of that happy time: but who was the Author, where, what time it was first-invented hath been a great Controversy, and not yet sufficiently determined. Epicharmus, one of Pythagoras's School, in his αλκυονι, mentions one Diomus a Sicilian, who, if we believe Athenæus, was the first that wrote Pastorals; those that fed Cattle had a peculiar kind of Poetry, call'd Bucolicks, of which Dotimus a Sicilian was Inventer.

Diodorus Siculus in τοῖς μυθολογικαῖς, seems to make Daphnis the Son of Mercury, and a certain Nymph to be the Author; and agreeable to this, Theon an old Scholiast on Theocritus, in his Notes upon the first Idyllium mentioning Daphnis, adds, he was the Author of Bucolicks, and Theocritus himself calls him the Muses Darling: and to this Opinion of Diodorus Siculus, Polydore Virgil readily assents.

But Mnaseas of Panara, in a Discourse of his concerning Europa, speaks thus of a Son of Pan, the God of Shepherds; Panis Filium Bubulcum a quo Et Bucolice canere. Now whether Mnaseas by that Bubulcum means only a Herdsmen, or one skilled in Bucolicks, is uncertain; but if Valla's Judgment be good, good, 'tis to be taken of the latter: yet Ælian was of another Mind, for he boldly affirms that Stesichorus, called Himeraus, was the first; and in the same place adds, that Daphnis the Son of Mercury was the first Subject of Bucolicks.

Some ascribe the Honour to Bacchus the President of the Nymphs, Satyrs, and the other Country-Gods, perhaps because he delighted in the Country; and others attribute it to Apollo, called Nomius, the God of Shepherds, and that he invented it then when he served Admetus in Thessaly, and fed his Herds: For, 'tis likely he, to recreate himself, and pass away his time, applied his Mind to such Songs as were best suitable to his present Condition. Many think we owe it to Pan the God of Shepherds, not a few to Diana that extremely delighted in Solitude and Woods; and some say Mercury himself: Of all which whilst Grammarians prattle, according to their usual Custom, they egregiously trifle; they suffer themselves to be put upon by Fables, and resign their Judgment up to foolish Pretensions, but Things and solid Truth is that we seek after.

As about the Author, so concerning the place of its Birth there is a great Dispute, some say Sparta, others Peloponesus, but most are for Sicily.

Valla the Placentine, a curious Searcher into Antiquity, thinks this sort of Poetry first appear'd amongst the Lacedemonians, for when the Persians had wasted almost all Greece, the Spartans say that they for fear of the Barbarians fled into Caves and lurking Holes; and that the Country Youth then began to apply themselves in Songs to Diana Caryatis, together with the Maids, who amidst their Songs offer'd Flowers to the Goddess: Which Custom containing somewhat of Religion, was in those Places a long Time very scrupulously observed.

Diomedes the Grammarian, in his Treatise of Measures, declares Sicily to be the Place: For thus he says, the Sicilian Shepherds in time of a great Pestilence, began to invent new Ceremonies to appease incensed Diana, whom afterward, for affording her help, and stopping the Plague, they called Λύτω: i. e. the Freer from their Miseries. This grew into Custom, and the Shepherds used to meet in Companies, to sing their Deliverer Diana's Praise, and these afterwards passing into Italy were there named Bucoliasta.

Pomponius Sabinus tells the Story thus: When the Hymns the Virgins us'd to sing in the Country to Diana were left off, because, by reason of the present Wars, the Maidens were forc'd to keep close within the Towns; the Shepherds met, and sang those kind of Songs, which are now call'd Bucolicks, to Diana; to whom they could not give the usual Worship by reason of the Wars: But Donatus says, that this kind of Verses was first sung to Diana by Orestes, when he wandred about Italy; after he fled from Scythia Taurica, and had taken away the Image of the Goddess, and hid it in a bundle of Sticks, whence she receiv'd the Name of Fascelina, or Phacellide τῶ τῆ φακέλῃ; at whose Altar, the very same Orestes was afterward expiated by his Sister Iphigenia: But how can any one rely on such Fables, when the inconsiderable Authors that propose them disagree so much amongst themselves?

Some are of Opinion, that the Shepherds were wont in solemn and set Songs about the Fields and Towns to celebrate the Goddess Pales; and beg her to bless their Flocks and Fields with a plenteous increase, and that from hence the Name, and Composure of Bucolicks continued.

Other prying ingenious Men make other Conjectures, as to this mazing Controversie thus Vossius delivers himself; The Ancients cannot be reconcil'd, but I rather incline to their Opinion, who think Bucolicks were invented either by the Sicilians or Peloponnesians, for both those use the Dorick Dialect, and all the Greek Bucolicks are writ in that: As for my self I think, that what Horace says of Elegies may be apply'd to the present Subject.

Who

*Who wrote the first in Elegiac strain, Grammarians long have search'd, but search'd in }
 And undecided still their Doubts remain. (vain ;*

For I find nothing certain about this Matter, since neither Valla, a diligent Inquirer after, and a good Judge in such Things, nor any of the late Writers produce any Thing upon which I can safely rely: Yet what beginning this kind of Poetry had, I think I can pretty well conjecture: For 'tis likely that first Shepherds us'd Songs to recreate themselves in their leisure Hours whilst they fed their Sheep; and that each Man, as his Wit served, accommodated his Songs to his present Circumstances: To this Solitude invited, and the extream Leisure that attends that Employment absolutely requir'd it: For as their Retirement gave them Leisure, and Solitude a fit Place for Meditation, Meditation and Invention produc'd a Verse, which is nothing else but a Speech fit to be sung, and so Songs began: Thus Hesiod was made a Poet, for he acknowledges himself that he receiv'd his Inspiration; for either the leisure, or fancy of Shepherds seems to have a natural aptitude to Verse.

And indeed I cannot but agree with Lucretius, that accurate Searcher into Nature, who delivers that from that State of Innocence the Golden Age, Pastorals continued down to his Time, for after he had in his fifth Book describ'd that most happy Age, he adds,

For then the Rural Muses reign'd.

From whence 'tis very plain, that as Donatus himself observ'd, Pastorals were the Invention of the simplicity and innocence of that Golden Age, if there was ever any such, or certainly of that Time which succeeded the beginning of the World; For tho' the Golden Age must be acknowledged to be only in the fabulous Times, yet 'tis certain, that the Manners of the first Men were so plain and simple, that we may easily derive both the innocent Employment of Shepherds, and Pastorals from them.
 C 2 there

The SECOND PART.

Of the Nature of PASTORALS.

OW let us inquire into the Nature of Pastoral, in what its Excellencies consist, and how it must be made to be exact : And this must needs be a hard Task, since I have no Guide, neither Aristotle nor Horace to direct me, for both they, whatever was the Matter, speak not one Word of this sort of Verse. And I am of Opinion, that none can treat well and clearly of any kind of Poetry, if he hath no helps from these Two : But since they lay down some general Notions of Poetry, which may be useful in the present Case, I shall follow their steps as close as possible I can.

Not only Aristotle but Horace too have defin'd that Poetry in general is Imitation ; I mention only these Two, for tho' Plato in his Second Book de Republica, and in his Timæus, delivers the same Thing, I shall not make use of his Authority at all: Now as Comedy according to Aristotle is the Image and Representation of a Genteel and City Life, so is Pastoral Poetry of a Country and Shepherd's Life ; for since Poetry in general is Imitation ; its several Species must likewise imitate, take Aristotle's own Words, Cap. 1. τᾶσαι τυγχάνουσιν ἔσαι μιμήσεις ; and these Species are differenc'd either by the subject Matter, when the Things to be imitated are quite different, or when the Manner in which you imitate, or the mode of Imitation is so : ἐν τρισὶ δὴ ταύταις διαφερείς ἢ μιμήσεις ἔσιν, ἐν οἷς καὶ ἃ, καὶ ὥς : Thus tho' of Epick Poetry and Tragedy the Subject is the same, and some great illustrious Action is to be imitated by both, yet since one by Representation, and the other by plain Narration imitates, each makes a different Species of Imitation. And Comedy and Tragedy, tho' they agree in this, that both represent, yet because the Matter is different, and Tragedy must represent some brave Action, and Comedy a Humour; these Two sorts of Imitation are Specifically different. And upon the same Account, since Pastoral chooseth the manners of Shepherds for its Imitation, it takes from its Matter a peculiar Difference, by which it is distinguish'd from all others.

But here Benius in his Comments upon Aristotle hath started a considerable Query: Which is this; Whether Aristotle, when he reckons up the different Species of Poetry, Cap. 1. doth include Pastoral, or no? And about this I find learn'd Men cannot at all agree: Which certainly Benius should have determin'd, or not rais'd: Some refer it to that sort which was sung to Pipes, for that Pastorals were so Apuleius intimates, when at the Marriage Feast of Phyche He brings in Paniscus singing Bucolicks to his Pipe: But since they did not seriously enough consider, what Aristotle meant by that which he calls αὐλητικὴ, they trifle, talk idly, and are not to be heeded in this Matter; for suppose some Musician should sing Virgil's Æneis to the Harp, ( and Ant. Lullus says it hath been done, ) should we therefore reckon that divine and incomparable Master of Heroick Poetry amongst the Lyricks?

Others with Cassius Bassus and Isacius Tzetzes hold that that Distribution of Poetry, which Aristotle and Tully hath left us, is deficient and imperfect; and that only the chief Species are reckoned, but the more inconsiderable not mention'd: I shall not here interest myself in that Quarrel of the Criticks, whether we have all Aristotle's Books of Poetry or no; this is a considerable Difficulty I confess, for Laertius who accurately weighs this Matter, says that he wrote Two Books of Poetry, the one lost, and the other we have, tho' Mutinensis is of another Mind: But to end this Dispute, I must agree with Vossius, who says the Philosopher comprehended these Species not expressly mentioned, under a higher and more noble Head: And that therefore Pastoral was contain'd in Epick, for these are his own Words, besides there are Epicks of an inferiour Rank, such as the Writers of Bucolicks: Sincerus, as Minturnus quotes him, is of the same Mind, for thus he delivers his Opinion concerning Epick Verse: The Matters about which these Numbers may be employed is various, either mean and low, as in Pastorals, great and lofty, as when the Subject is Divine Things, or Heroick Actions, or of a middle Rank, as when we use them to deliver Precepts in: And this likewise he signifies before, where he sets down Three Sorts of Epicks: One of which, says he, is Divine, and the most excellent by much in all Poetry; the other the lowest but most Pure, in which Theocritus excelled, which indeed shews nothing of Poetry beside the bare Numbers: These Points being thus settled, the remaining Difficulties will be more easily dispatched.

For as in Dramatick Poetry the Dignity and Mean-ness of the Persons represented make two different Species of Imitation, the one Tragick, which agrees to none but great and illustrious Persons; the other Comick, which suits with common and genteel Humours: So in Epick too, there may be reckoned two sorts of Imitation, one of which belongs to Heroes, and that makes the Heroick; the other to Rusticks and Shepherds, and that constitutes the Pastoral. Now as a Picture imitates the Features of the Face, so Poetry doth Action, and it is not a Representation of the Person but the Action. From all which we may gather this Definition of Pastoral: It is the Imitation of the Action of a Shepherd, or of one taken under that Character: Thus Virgil's Gallus, tho' not really a Shepherd, for he was a Man of great quality in Rome, yet belongs to Pastoral, because he is represented like a Shepherd: Hence the Poet:

The Definition of Pastoral.

*The Goatherd and the heavy Herdsmen came,
And kindly ask'd what rais'd the fatal Flame.*

The Scene lies amongst Shepherds, the Swains are brought in, the Herdsmen come to see his Misery, and the Fiction is suited to the real Condition of a Shepherd; the same is to be said for his Silenus, who tho' he seems lofty, and to sound too loud for an Oaten Reed, yet since what he sings he sings to Shepherds, and suits his Subject to their Apprehensions, his is to be acknowledged Pastoral. This Rule we must stick to, that we might infallibly discern what is strictly Pastoral in Virgil and Theocritus, and what not: For in Theocritus there are some more lofty Thoughts, which not having any Thing belonging to Shepherds for their Subject, must by no means be accounted Pastoral: But of this more in its proper Place.

My present inquiry must be what is the Subject Matter of a Pastoral, about which it is not easie to resolve; since neither from Aristotle, nor any of the Greeks who have written Pastorals, we can receive certain Direction. For sometimes they treat of high and sublime Things, like Epick Poets; what can be loftier than the whole Seventh Idyllium of Bias, in which Myrsan urges Lycidas the Shepherd to sing the Loves of Deidamia, and Achilles. For he begins from Helen's Rape, and goes on to the revengeful Fury of the Atrides, and shuts up in one Pastoral, all that is great and sounding in Homer's Iliad.

*Sparta was fir'd with Rage,
And gather'd Greece to prosecute Revenge.*

And Theocritus's Verses are sometimes as sounding, and his Thoughts as high: For upon serious Consideration I cannot mind what part of all the Heroicks is so strong and sounding as that Idyllium on Hercules, λεοντοφονω, in which Hercules himself tells Phylew,

Part II. upon PASTORALS.

Phyleus, how he kill'd the Lyon whose Skin he wore :
For, not to mention many, what can be greater than this Expression.

And gaping Hell receive his mighty Soul :

Why should I instance in the δίοσκει, which hath not one Line below Heroick ; the greatness of this is almost inexpressible.

ἀνὴρ ὑπέρτατος ἐνήμερος, ἐνδιδάσκει
δαῖς ἰδῆν.

And some other pieces are as strong as these, such is the Panegyrick on Ptolemy, Helen's Epithalamium, and the Fight of young Hercules and the Snakes :
Now how is it likely that such Subjects should be fit for Pastorals, of which in my Opinion, the same may be said which Ovid doth of his Cydidpe ?

Cydidpe, Homer, doth not fit thy Muse.

For certainly Pastorals ought not to rise to the Majesty of Heroicks : But who on the other side dares re-prehend such great and judicious Authors, whose very doing it, is Authority enough ? What shall I say of Virgil ? Who in his Sixth Eclogue hath put together almost all the Particulars of the fabulous Age ; what is so high to which Silenus that Master of My- steries doth not soar ?

For lo ! he sung the World's stupendious Birth,
How scatter'd Seeds of Sea, of Air, and Earth,
And purer Fire through universal Night
And empty space did fruitfully unite :
From whence th' innumerable race of Things
By circular successive order springs :

And

And afterward,

*How Pyrra's Stony Race rose from the Ground,
And Saturn reign'd with golden Plenty Crown'd!
How bold Prometheus ( whose untam'd desire, Rival'd the Sun with his own Heavenly Fire )
Now doom'd the Scythian Vultures endless Prey
Severely pays for animating Clay.*

So true, so certain it is, that nothing is so high and lofty to which Bucolicks may not successfully aspire. But if this be so, what will become of Macrobius, Georgius Valla, Julius Scaliger, Vossius, and the whole Company of Grammarians? Who all affirm that simplicity and meanness is so essential to Pastorals, that it ought to be confin'd to the State, Manners, Apprehension and even common Phrases of Shepherds: For nothing can be said to be Pastoral, which is not accommodated to their Condition: And for this Reason Nannius Almaritanus in my Opinion is a Trifler, who, in his Comments on Virgil's Eclogues, thinks that those sorts of Compositions may now and then be lofty, and treat of great Subjects: Where he likewise divides the Matter of Bucolicks, into Low, Middle, and High: And makes Virgil the Author of this Division, who in his Fourth Eclogue, ( as he imagines ) divides the matter of Bucolicks into Three Sorts, and intimates this Division by these Three Words: Bushes, Shrubs and Woods.

*Sicilian Muse begin a loftier strain,
The Bushes and the Shrubs that shade the Plain
Delight not all: if I to Woods repair
My Song shall make them worth a Consul's Care.*

By Woods, as he fancies, Virgil means high and stately Trees, so He would have a great and lofty Subject to be implied, such as he designed for the Consul :

Consul : By Bushes, which are almost even with the ground, the meanest and lowest Argument ; and by Shrubs a Subject not so high as the one, nor so low as the other, as the Thing it self is. And therefore these Lines,

If I to Woods repair

My Song shall make them worth a Consul's Care.

are thus to be understood, That if we choose high and sublime Arguments, our Work will be fit for the Patronage of a Consul. This is Nannius's Interpretation of that Place ; too pedantical and subtle I'm afraid, for it is not credible, that ever Virgil thought of reckoning great and lofty Things amongst the Subjects of Bucolicks, especially since,

When his Thalia rais'd her bolder Voice

And Kings and Battles were her lofty choice,

Phæbus did twitch his Ear, mean thoughts infuse,

And with this whisper check'd th' aspiring Muse :

A Shepherd, Tityrus, his Sheep should feed,

And choose a Subject suited to his Reed.

This certainly was a serious Admonition implied by the twitching of his Ear, and I believe if he had continued in this former Humour, and not obey'd the smarting Admonition, he had still felt it ; so far was he from thinking Kings and Battles fit Themes for a Shepherd's Song : And this evidently shows that in Virgil's Opinion, contrary to Nannius's Fancy, great Things cannot in the least be comprehended within the subject Matter of Pastorals ; no, it must be low and humble, which Theocritus very happily expresseth by this Word Βακολιδόσδεν, i. e. as the Interpreters explain it, sing humble Strains.

Therefore let Pastoral never venture upon a lofty Subject, let it not recede one jot from its proper Matter, but be employ'd about Rustick Affairs : Such as are mean and humble in themselves ; and such are are the Affairs of Shepherds, especially their Loves, but those must be pure and innocent; not disturb'd by vain suspicious Jealousie, nor polluted by Rapes: The Rivals must not fight, and their Emulations must be without Quarrellings: Such as Vida meant.

*Whilst on his Reed he Shepherds strifes conveys,
And soft complaints in smooth Sicilian Lays.*

To these may be added, Sports, Fests, Gifts, and Presents; but not costly, such are yellow Apples, young Stock-Doves, Milk, Flowers, and the like; all things must appear delightful and easie, nothing vicious and rough: A perfidious Pimp, a designing Jilt, a griping Usurer, a crafty factious Servant, must have no room there, but every part must be full of the simplicity of the Golden Age, and of that Candor which was then eminent: For as Juvenal affirms,

Baseness was wonderful in that good Age.

Sometimes Funeral-Rites are the Subject of an Eclogue, where the Shepherds scatter Flowers on the Tomb, and sing Rustick Songs in Honour of the Dead: Examples of this kind are left us by Virgil in his Daphnis, and Bion in his Adonis, and this hath nothing disagreeable to a Shepherd: In short, whatever, (the Decorum being still preserv'd) can be done by a Shepherd, may be the Subject of a Pastoral.

Now there may be more kinds of Subjects than Servius or Donatus allow, for they confine us to that Number which Virgil hath made use of, tho' Minturnus in his second Book de Poetâ declares against this Opinion: But as a glorious Heroick Action must be the Subject of an Heroick Poem, so a Pastoral Action of a Pastoral; at least it must be so turn'd and wrought, that it might appear to be the Action of a Shepherd; which Caution is very necessary to be observ'd; observ'd, to clear a great many Difficulties in this Matter? For tho' as the Interpreters assure us, most of Virgil's Eclogues are about the Civil War, planting Colonies, the Murder of the Emperour, and the like, which in themselves are too great and too lofty for humble Pastoral to reach, yet because they are accommodated to the Genius of Shepherds, may be the Subject of an Eclogue, for that sometimes will admit of Gods and Heroes, so they appear like, and are shrouded under the Persons of Shepherds: But as for these Matters which neither really are, nor are so wrought as to seem the Actions of Shepherds, such are in Moschus's Europa, Theocritus's Epithalamium of Helen, and Virgil's Pollio; to declare my Opinion freely, I cannot think them to be fit Subjects for Bucolicks: And upon this Account I suppose it is that Servius in his Comments on Virgil's Bucolicks reckons only seven of Virgil's ten Eclogues, and only ten of Theocritus's thirty, to be pure Pastorals; and Salmasius upon Solinus says, that amongst Theocritus's Poems there are some which you may call what you please beside Pastorals: And Heinsius in his Scholia upon Theocritus will allow but Ten of his Idylliums to be Bucolicks, 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 11. for all the rest are deficient either in Matter or Form, and from this number of pure Pastoral Idylliums I am apt to think, that Theocritus seems to have made that Pipe, on which he tun'd his Pastorals, and which he consecrated to Pan, of ten Reeds, as Salmasius in his Notes on Theocritus's Pipe hath learnedly observ'd: In which two Verses always make one Reed of the Pipe, therefore all are so unequal, like the unequal Reeds of a Pipe, that if you put two Equals together, which make one Reed, the whole inequality consists in ten Pairs; when in the common Pipes there were usually no more than seven Reeds, and this the less curious Observers have heedlessly past by.

Some are of Opinion that whatever is done in the Country, and, in one Word, every Thing that hath nought of the City in it, may be treated of in Pastorals; and that the Discourse of Fishers, Plowmen,

D

Reapers,

Reapers, Hunters, and the like, belong to this kind of Poetry: Which according to the Rule that I have laid down cannot be true, for as I before hinted, nothing but the Action of a Shepherd can be the Subject of a Pastoral.

I shall not here enquire, tho' it may seem proper, whether we can decently bring into an Eclogue Reapers, Vine-dressers, Gardeners, Fowlers, Hunters, Fishers, or the like, whose Lives for the most part are taken up with too much Business and Employment to have any vacant Time for Songs, and idle Chat, which are more agreeable to the leisure of a Shepherd's Life: For in a great many Rustick Affairs, either the Hardship and painful Labour will not admit a Song, as in Plowing; or the Solitude, as in Hunting, Fishing, Fowling, and the like; but of this I shall discourse more largely in another place.

Now it is not sufficient to make a Poem a true Pastoral, that the Subject of it is the Action of a Shepherd, for in Hesiod's ἑργα, and Virgil's Georgicks, there are a great many Things that belong to the Employment of a Shepherd, yet none fancy they are Pastorals; from whence 'tis evident, that beside the Matter, which we have defin'd to be the Action of a Shepherd, there is a peculiar Form proper to this kind of Poetry, by which 'tis distinguish'd from all others.

Of Poetry in General: Socrates, as Plato tells us, would have Fable to be the Form: Aristotle, Imitation: I shall not dispute what Difference there is between these Two, but only inquire whether Imitation be the Form of Pastoral: It is certain that Epick Poetry is differenc'd from Tragick only by the manner of Imitation, for the latter imitates by Action, and the former by bare Narration: But Pastoral is the Imitation of a Pastoral Action either by bare Narration, as in Virgil's Alexis, and Theocritus's 7th Idyllium, in which the Poet speaks all along in his own Person: Or by Action, as in Virgil's Tityrus, and the first of Theocritus, or by both mixt, as in the Second and Eleventh Idylliums, in which the Poet partly speaks in his own Person, and partly makes others speak, and I think the old *Scholias*t on Theocritus took an hint from these when he says, that Pastoral is a mixture made up of all sorts, for it is Narrative, Dramatick, and mixt; and Aristotle, tho' obscurely, seems to hint in those Words, In every one of the mentioned Arts there is Imitation, in some simple, in some mixt; now this latter being peculiar to Bucolicks, makes its very Form and Essence: And therefore Scaliger, in the 4th Chapter of his first Book of Poetry, reckons up three Species of Pastorals, the first hath but one Person, the second several, which sing alternately; the third is mixt of both the other: And the same Observation is made by Heinsius in his Notes on Theocritus, for thus he speaks very plainly to our Purpose, the Character of Bucolicks is a mixture of all sorts of Characters, Dramatick, Narrative, or mixt: From all which it is very manifest that the manner of Imitation which is proper to Pastorals is the mixt: For in other kinds of Poetry it is one and simple, at least not so manifold; as in Tragedy, Action: In Epick Poetry, Narration.

Now I shall explain what sort of Fable; Manners, Thought, Expression, which four are necessary to constitute every kind of Poetry, are proper to this sort.

Concerning the Fable which Aristotle calls, οὐθυσιν τῶν περὶ μύθων,

I have but one thing to say: This, as the Philosopher hints, as of all other sorts of Poetry, so of Pastoral, is the very Soul: And therefore Socrates in Plato says, that in those Verses which he had made there was nothing wanting but the Fable: Therefore Pastorals, as other kinds of Poetry, must have their Fable, if they will be Poetry: Thus in Virgil's Silenus, which contains the Stories of almost the whole Fabulous Age, two Shepherds whom Silenus had often promis'd a Song, and as often deceiv'd, seize upon him, being drunk and asleep, and bind him with wreath'd Flowers: Egle comes in and encourages the timorous Youths, and stains his jolly red Face with Black-berries: Silenus laughs at their innocent Contrivance and desires to be unbound, and then with a premeditated Song satisfies the Nymphs and Boys Curiosity ; the incomparable Poet sings wonders, the Rocks rejoice, the Vales eccho, and happy Eurotas, as if Phæbus himself sang, hears all, and bids the Laurels that grow upon his Banks listen to, and learn the Song.

Happy Eurotas as he flow'd along

Heard all, and bad the Laurels learn the Song.

Thus every Eclogue or Idyllium must have its Fable, which must be the ground-work of the whole Design, but it must not be perplex'd with sudden and unlook'd for changes, as in Marinus's Adonis : For that, tho' the Fable be of a Shepherd, yet by reason of the strange Bombast under Plots, and wonderful Occurrences, cannot be accounted Pastoral ; for that it might be agreeable to the Person it treats of, it must be plain and simple, such as Sophocles's Ajax, in which there is not so much as one change of Fortune.

As for the Manners, let that Precept, which Horace lays down in his Epistle to the Pisones, be principally observed.

Let each be grac'd with that which suits him best.

For this, as it is a Rule relating to Poetry in general, so it respects this kind also of which we are treating ; and against this Tasso in his Amyntas, Bonavellus in his Phyllis, Guarinus in his Pastor Fido, Marinus in his Idylliums, and most of the Italians grievously offend, for they make their Shepherds too polite, and elegant, and cloath them with all the neatness of the Town, and Complement of the Court, which tho' it may seem very pretty, yet amongst good Criticks, let Veratus say what he will in their Excuse, it cannot be allowed : For it is against Minturnus's Opinion, who in his second Book de Poetâ says thus : Mean Persons are brought in, those in Comedy indeed more polite, those in Pastorals more unelegant, as suppos'd to lead a rude Life in Solitude ; and Jason Denor a Doctor of Padua takes notice of the same as a very absurd Error. Aristotle heretofore for a like Fault reprehended the Megarensians, who observed no Decorum in their Theatre, but brought in mean Persons with a Train fit for a King, and cloath'd a Cobler or a Tinker in a Purple Robe: In vain doth Veratus in his Dispute against Jason Denor, to defend those elaborately exquisite Discourses, and notable sublime Sentences of his Pastor Fido, bring some lofty Idylliums of Theocritus, for those are not acknowledged to be Pastoral; Theocritus and Virgil must be consulted in this Matter, the former designedly makes his Shepherd's Discourse in the Dorick, i. e. the Rustick Dialect, sometimes scarce true Grammar; and the other studiously affects Ignorance in the Persons of his Shepherds, as Servius hath observ'd, and is evident in Melibæus, who makes Oaxes to be a River in Crete, when 'tis in Mesopotamia; and both of them take this way, that the Manners may the more exactly suit with the Persons they represent, who of themselves are rude and unpolish'd. And this proves that they scandalously err, who make their Shepherds appear polite and elegant, nor can I imagine what Veratus who makes so much ado about the polite Manners of the Arcadian Shepherds, would say to Polybius, who tells us that the Arcadians, by reason of the Mountainousness of the Country, and Hardness of the Weather, are very unsociable and austere.

Now as too much Nearness in Pastoral is not to be allow'd, so Rusticity (I do not mean that which Plato in his Third Book of a Common-wealth, mentions, which is but a part of a down-right Honesty) but clownish Stupidity, such as Theophrastus, in his Character of a Rustick, describes; or that disagreeable unfashionable Roughness which Horace mentions in his Epistle to Lollius, must not in my Opinion be endur'd. On this side Mantuan errs extremely, and is intolerably absurd, who makes Shepherds blockishly sottish, and insufferably rude. And a certain Interpreter blames Theocritus for the same thing, who in some Mens Opinion sometimes keeps too close to the Clown, and is rustick and uncouth ; but his may be very well excus'd, because the Age in which he sang was not as polite as now.

But that every part may be suitable to a Shepherd, we must consult unstain'd, uncorrupted Nature ; so that the Manners might not be too Clownish nor too Courtly : And this Mean may be easily observed, if the Manners of our Shepherds be represented according to the Genius of the Golden Age, in which, if Guarinus may be believ'd, every Man follow'd that Employment. And Nannius in the Preface to his Comments on Virgil's Bucolicks, is of the same Opinion, for he requires that the Manners might represent the Golden Age : And this was the Reason that Virgil himself in his Pollio describes that Age, which he knew very well was proper to Bucolicks : For in the whole Course of a Shepherd's Life, there can be no form more excellent than that which was the Practice of the Golden Age ; and this may serve to moderate and temper the Affections that must be express'd in this sort of Poetry, and sufficiently declare the whole Essence of it, which in short must be taken from the Nature of a Shepherd's Life, to which a Courtly Dress is not agreeable.

That the Thought may be commendable, it must be suitable to the Manners ; as those must be plain and pure that must be so too : nor must contain any deep, exquisite, or elaborate Fancies. And again, this the Italians offend, who continually hunt after smart witty Sayings, very foolishly in my Opinion ; for in the Country, where all things should be full of Plainness and Simplicity, who would paint or endeavour to be gaudy, when such Appearances would be very disagreeable, and offend ? Pontanus in this matter hath said very well, The Thought must not be too exquisite and witty, the Comparisons obvious and common, such as the State of Persons and Things require : Yet tho' too scrupulous a Curiosity in Ornament ought to be rejected, yet lest the Thought be cold and flat, it must have some Quickness of Passion, as in these ;

Cruel

*Cruel Alexis can't my Verses move ?
Hast thou no Pity ? I must die for Love.*

And again,

He neither Gods, nor yet my Verse regards.

The Sense must not be long, copious, and continued, for Pastoral is weak, and not able to hold out ; but of this more when I come to lay down Rules for its Composition : But tho' it ought to imitate Comedy in its common way of Discourse, yet it must not chuse old Comedy for its Pattern, for that is too impudent, and licentious abusive. Let it be free and modest, honest and ingenuous, and that will make it agreeable to the Golden Age.

Let the Expression be plain and easy, but elegant and near, and the purest which the Language will afford ; Pontanus upon Virgil's Bucolicks gives the very same Rule. In Bucolicks the Expression must be humble, nearer common Discourse than otherwise, not very spirituous and vivid, yet such as shows Life and Strength : 'Tis certain that Virgil in his Bucolicks useth the same Words which Tully did in the Forum or the Senate : and Tityrus beneath his shady Beech speaks as pure and good Latin as Augustus in his Palace, as Modicius in his Apology for Virgil hath excellently observ'd. This Rule, it is true, Theocritus hath not so strictly follow'd, whose Rustick and Pastoral Muse, as Quintilian phraseth it, not only is afraid to appear in the Forum, but the City : and for the very same thing an Alexandrian flouts the Syracusan Women in the Fifteenth Idyllium of Theocritus ; for when they, being then in the City, spoke the Dorick Dialect, the delicate Citizen could not endure it, and found fault with their distastful, as he thought, Pronunciation : and his Reflection was very smart.

Like

Like Pidgeons you have Mouths from Ear to Ear.

So intolerable did that broad way of Pronunciation, tho' exactly fit for a Clown's Discourse, seem to a Citizen. And hence Probus observes, that it was much harder for the Latines to write Pastorals, than for the Greeks; because the Latines had not some Dialects peculiar to the Country, and others to the City, as the Greeks had; besides, the Latin Language, as Quintilian hath observed, is not capable of the Neatness which is necessary to Bucolicks, no, that is the peculiar Privilege of the Greeks. We cannot, says he, be so low, they exceed us in Subtilty, and in Propriety they are at more Certainty than we. And again, in pat and close Expressions we cannot reach the Greeks. And, if we believe Tully, Greek is much more fit for Ornament than Latin, for it hath much more of that Neatness, and ravishing Delightfulness, which Bucolicks necessarily require.

Yet of Pastoral, with whose Nature we are not very well acquainted, what that Form is which the Greeks call the Character, is not very easy to determine; yet that we may come to some Certainty, we must stick to our former Observation, viz. that Pastoral belongs properly to the Golden Age. For as Tully in his Treatise de Oratore says, In all our Disputes the Subject is to be measur'd by the most perfect of that kind, and Synesius in his Encomium on Baldness hints the very same, when he tells us that Poetry fashions its Subject as Men imagine it should be, and not as really it is: πρὸς δόξαν, ἢ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν: Now the Life of a Shepherd, that it might be rais'd to the highest Perfection, is to be referr'd to the Manners and Age of the World whilst yet innocent, and such as the Fables have describ'd it: And as Simplicity was the principal Virtue of that Age, so it ought to be the peculiar Grace, and as it were Character of Bucolicks; in which the Fable, Manners, Thought, and Expression ought to be full of the most innocent Simplicity imaginable: for as Innocence in Life, so

Purity

Purity and Simplicity in Discourse was the Glory of that Age. So as Gravity to Epicks, Sweetness to Lyricks, Humour to Comedy, Softness to Elegies, and Smartness to Epigrams, so Simplicity to Pastorals is proper; and one upon Theocritus says, That the Idea of his Bucolicks is in every part pure, and in all that belongs to Simplicity very happy. Such is this of Virgil, Unwholsome to us Singers is the shade

Of Juniper, 'tis an unwholsome Shade.

Than which in my Opinion nothing can be more simply, nothing more rustically said; and this is the Reason I suppose why Macrobius says that this kind of Poetry is creeping and upon mean Subjects: and why too Virgil's Tityrus lying under his shady Beech displeaseth some; excellent Criticks indeed, whom I wish a little more Sense, that they might not really be, what they would not seem to be, Ridiculous: Theocritus excels Virgil in this, of whom Modicius says, Theocritus deserves the greatest Commendation for his happy Imitation of the Simplicity of his Shepherds: Virgil hath mix'd Allegories, and some other things which contain too much Learning, and deepness of Thought for Persons of so mean a Quality. Yet here I must obviate their Mistake, who fancy that this sort of Poetry, because in it self low and simple, is the proper Work of mean Wits, and not the sublime and excellent Perfections: For as I think there can be nothing more elegant than easy naked Simplicity, so likewise nothing can require more Strength of Wit, and greater Pains; and he must be of a great and clear Judgment, who attempts Pastoral, and comes of with Honour: For there is no part of Poetry that requires more Spirit, for if any part is not close and well compacted the whole Fabrick will be ruin'd, and the Matter, in it self humble, must creep; unless it is held up by the Strength and Vigour of the Expression.

Another Qualification and Excellence of Pastoral is to imitate Timanthes's Art, of whom Pliny writes thus;

thus ; Timanthes was very ingenious, in all his Pieces more was to be understood than the Colours express'd, and tho' his Art was very extraordinary, yet his Fancy exceeded it. In this Virgil is peculiarly happy, but others, especially raw unexperienced Writers, if they are to describe a Rainbow, or a River, pour out their whole Stock, and are unable to contain. Now it is properly requisite to a Pastoral that these should be a great deal couch'd in a few Words, and every thing it says, should be so short, and so close, as if its chiefest Excellence was to be sparing in Expression : such is that of Virgil ;

These Fields and Corn shall a Barbarian share :
See the Effects of all our Civil War.

How short is that ? how concise ? and yet how full of Sense : In the same Eclogue,

I wonder'd why all thy Complaints were made,
Absent was Tityrus :

And the like you may every where meet with,
as,

Mopius weat Nisa, what may'nt Lovers hope ?

And in the second Eclogue.

Whom dost thou fly, ah Frantick ! oft the Woods
Hold Gods, and Paris equal to the Gods.

This Grace Virgil learn'd from Theocritus, almost all whose Periods ; especially in the Third Idyllium, have no Conjunction to connect them, that the Sense might be more close, and the Affection vehement and strong : as in this,

Let all things change, let Pears the Firs adorn
Now Daphnis dies.

And

And in the third Eclogue.

But when ſhe ſaw, how great was the Surprize ! &c.

And any one may find a great many of the like in Theocritus and Virgil, if with a leiſurely Delight he nicely examines their delicate Compoſures : And this I account the greateſt Grace in Poſtorals, which in my Opinion thoſe that write Poſtorals do not ſufficiently obſerve. 'Tis true, ours (the French) and the Italian Language is too babling to endure it; this is the Rock, on which thoſe that write Poſtorals in their Mother Tongue are uſually ſplit, but the Italians are inevitably loſt; who having ſtore of Wit, a very ſubtle Invention and flowing Fancy, cannot contain; every thing that comes into their Mind muſt be poured out, nor are they able to endure the leaſt Reſtraint; as is evident from Marinus's Idylliums, and a great many of that Nation who have ventur'd on ſuch Compoſures : For unleſs there are many Stops and Breakings off in the Series of a Poſtoral, it can neither be pleaſing nor artificial : And in my Opinion Virgil excells Theocritus in this, for Virgil is neither ſo continued, nor ſo long as Theocritus, who indulges too much the Garrulity of his Greek; nay, even in thoſe things which he expreſſeth he is more cloſe, and more cauſiouſly conceals that part which ought to be diſſembled : And this I am ſure is a moſt admirable part of Eloquence; as Tully in his Epistle to Atticus ſays, 'Tis rare to ſpeak eloquently, but more rare to be eloquently ſilent. And this unſkilful Criticks are not acquainted with, and therefore are wont oftner to find fault with that which is not fitly expreſt, than commend that which is prudently conceal'd. I could heap up a great many more things to this purpoſe, but I ſee no need of ſuch a Trouble, ſince no Man can rationally doubt of the Goodneſs of my Obſervation : Therefore, in ſhort, let him that writes Poſtorals think
Bre-

Brevity, if it doth not obscure his Sense, to be the greatest Grace which he can attain.

Now why Bucolicks should require such Brevity, and be so essentially sparing in Expression, I see no other Reason but this; it loves Simplicity so much, that it must be averse to that Pomp and Ostentation which Epick Poetry must show, for that must be copious and flowing, in every part smooth and equal to it self: But Pastoral must dissemble, and hide even that which it would show, like Damon's Galatea, who flies then when she most desires to be discovered.

And to the Buses flies, yet would be seen.

And this doth not proceed from any malicious ill-natur'd Coyness, as some imagine, but from an ingenuous Modesty and Bashfulness, which usually accompanies, and is a Proof of Simplicity. 'Tis very rare, says Pliny, to find a Man so exquisitely skilful, as to be able to show those Features in a Picture which he hides; and I think it to be so difficult a Task, that none but the most excellent Wits can attempt it with Success: For small Wits usually abound with a multitude of Words.

The Third Grace of Bucolicks is Neatness, which contains all the taking Prettiness and Sweetness of Expression, and whatsoever is call'd the Delicacies of the more delightful and pleasing Muses. This the Rural Muses bestow'd on Virgil, as Horace in the tenth Satire of his first Book says,

*And Virgil's happy Muse in Eclogues plays,
Soft and facetious;*

Which Fabius takes to signify the most taking Neatness, and most exquisite Elegance imaginable: For thus he explains this place, in which he agrees with Tully, who in his Third Book de Oratore, says, the Atticks are facetious, i. e. elegant. Tho' the common Interpreters of these Words are not of the same mind:

mind : But if by facetious, Horace had meant jesting, and such as is design'd to make Men laugh, and apply'd that to Virgil, nothing could have been more ridiculous ; it is the Design of Comedy to raise Laughter, but Eclogue should only delight, and charm by its taking Prettiness. All ravishing Delicacies of Thought, all Sweetness of Expression, all that Salt from which Venus, as the Poets fable, rose, are so essential to this kind of Poetry, that it cannot endure any thing that is scurrilous, maliciously biting, or ridiculous. There must be nothing in it but Honey, Milk, Roses, Violets, and the like Sweetness, so that when you read you might think that you are in Adonis's Gardens, as the Greeks speak, i. e. in the most pleasant place imaginable : For since the Subject of Eclogue must be mean and unsurprizing, unless it maintains Purity and Neatness of Expression, it cannot please.

Therefore it must do as Tully says his Friend Atticus did, who entertaining his Acquaintance with Leeks and Onions, pleas'd them all very well, because he had them serv'd up in wicker Chargers, and clean Baskets ; so let an Eclogue serve up its Fruits and Flowers with some, tho' no costly Imbellishment, such as may answer to the wicker Chargers, and Baskets ; which may be provided at a cheap rate, and are agreeable to the Country : yet (and this Rule if you aim at exact Simplicity, can never be too nicely observ'd) you must most carefully avoid all Paint and Gawdiness of Expression, and (which of all sorts of Elegancies is the most difficult to be avoided) you must take the greatest Care that no scrupulous Trimness, or artificial Fineness appear. For, as Quintilian teaches, in some Cases Diligence and Care are most troublesomely perverse ; and when things are most sweet they are next to loathsome, and many times degenerate : Therefore as in Women, a careless Dress becomes some extremely ; Thus Pastoral, that it might not be uncomely, ought sometimes to be negligent, or the finest of its Ornaments ought not to appear and lie open to every Body's View : so that it ought to affect a studied Carelessness, and design'd Negligence : And that this may be all Gawdinefs of Dress, such as Paint and Curls, all artificial Shining is to be despis'd, but in the mean time care must be taken, that the Expression be bright and simply clean, not filthy and disgustful, but such as is varnish'd with Wit and Fancy. Now to perfect this, Nature is chiefly to be look'd upon (for nothing that is disagreeable to Nature can please) yet that will hardly prevail naked by it self, and without the polishing of Art.

Then there are Three things, in which, as in its parts, the whole Character of a Pastoral is contain'd ; Simplicity of Thought and Expression ; Shortness of Periods, full of Sense and Spirit ; and the Delicacy of a most elegant ravishing unaffected Neatness.

Next I will enquire into the Efficient, and then into the Final Cause of Pastorals.

Aristotle assigns two efficient Causes of Poetry, the natural Desire of Imitation in Man, whom he calls the most imitative Creature ; and Pleasure consequent to that Imitation ; which indeed are the remote Causes, but the immediate are Art and Nature. Now according to the Differences of Genius's, several Species of Poetry have been introduc'd. For as the Philosopher hath observ'd, (Σεπταδὴν κατὰ ἑκάστην ἡδὴ ἢ ποίησις.) Thus those that were lofty imitated great and illustrious ; those that were low spirited and groveling, mean Actions ; and every one according to the various Inclination of his Nature, follow'd this or that sort of Poetry. This the Philosopher expressly affirms ; and Dio Chrysostomus says of Homer, that he received from the Gods a Nature fit for all sorts of Verse ; but this is an Happiness which none partake, but as he in the same Place intimates, God-like Minds.

Not to mention other kinds of Poetry, what particular Genius is requir'd to Pastoral, I think, is evident from the foregoing Discourse, for as every part of it ought to be full of simple and inartificial Neatness, so it requires a Wit naturally neat and plea-

pleasant, born to delight and ravish, which are the Qualifications certainly of a great and most excellent Nature : For whatsoever in any kind is delicate and elegant, that is usually most excellent : And such a Genius that hath a Sprightfulness of Nature, and is well instructed by the Rules of Art, is fit to attempt Pastorals.

Of the End of Pastorals it is not so easy to give an Account : For as to the end of Poetry in general ; the Enemies of Poets run out into a large common Place, and loudly tell us that Poetry is frivolous and unprofitable. Excellent Men that love Profit perchance, but have no regard for Honesty and Goodness ; who do not know that all excellent Arts sprang from Poetry at first.

*Which what is bonest, base, or just, or good,
Better than Crantor, or Chrylippus shew'd.*

For it is Poetry, that like a chaste unsported Virgin, shews Men the way, and the Means to live happily, who afterwards are deprav'd by the immodest Precepts of vitiated and impudent Philosophy. For every body knows, that the Epick sets before us the highest Example of the bravest Man ; the Tragedian regulates the Affections of the Mind ; the Lyrick reforms Manners, or sings the Praises of Gods and Heroes ; so that there's no part of Poetry but hath its proper End, and Profits.

But grant all this true, Pastoral can make no such Pretence. If you sing a Hero, you excite Mens Minds to imitate his Actions, and notable Exploits ; but how can Bucolicks apply these or the like Advantages to it self ? He that reads Heroick Poems, learns what is the Virtue of a Hero, and wishes to be like him ; but he that reads Pastorals, neither learns how to feed Sheep, nor wishes himself a Shepherd. And a great deal more to this purpose you may see in Modicius, as Pontanus cites him in his Notes on Virgil's Eclogues.

But when it is the End of Comedy, as Jerom in his Epistle to Furia says, to know the Humours of Men, and to describe them; and Demea in Terence intimates the same thing;

*To look on all Mens Lives as in a Glass,
And take from those Examples for our Own.*

so that our Humours and Conversations may be better'd and improv'd; why may not Pastoral be allow'd the same Privilege, and be admitted to regulate and improve a Shepherd's Life by its Bucolicks? For since it is a Product of the Golden Age, it will shew the most innocent Manners of the most ancient Simplicity, how plain and honest, and how free from all Varnish, and Deceit, to more degenerate, and worse times. And certainly for this it is commendable in its kind, since its Design in drawing the Image of a Country and Shepherd's Life, is to teach Honesty, Candor, and Simplicity, which are the Virtues of private Men; as Epicks teach the highest Fortitude, and Prudence, and Conduct, which are the Virtues of Generals, and Kings. And it is necessary to Government, that as there is one kind of Poetry to instruct the Citizens, there should be another to fashion the Manners of the Rusticks; which if Pastoral, as it does, did not do, yet would it not be altogether frivolous, and idle, since by its taking Prettinesses it can delight, and please. It can scarce be imagin'd, how much the most flourishing times of the Roman Common-wealth, in which Virgil wrote, grew better and brisker by the use of Pastoral; with it were Augustus, Mecenas, Asinius Pollio, Alphenus Varus, Cornelius Gallus, the most admired Wits of that happy Age, wonderfully pleas'd; for whatever is sweet and ravishing, is contain'd in this sweetest kind of Poetry. But if we must slight every thing, from which no Profit is to be hop'd, all Pleasures of the Eye and Ear are presently to be laid aside; and those excellent Arts, Musick, and Painting, with which which the best Men use to be delighted, are presently to be left off. Nor is it indeed credible, that so many excellent Wits, as have devoted themselves to Poetry, would ever have meddled with it, if it had been so empty, idle, and frivolous, as some ridiculously morose imagine; who forsooth are better pleas'd with the Severity of Philosophy, and her harsh, deform'd Impropriety of Expressions. But the Judgments of such Men are the most contemptible in the World; for when by Poetry Mens Minds are fashioned to generous Humours, Kindness, and the like; those must needs be Strangers to all those good Qualities, who hate, or proclaim Poetry to be frivolous, and useless.

The THIRD PART.

Rules for writing PASTORALS.

IN delivering Rules for writing Pastorals, I shall not point to the Streams, which to look after argues a small creeping Genius, but lead you to the Fountains. But first I must tell you, how difficult it is to write Pastorals, which many seem not sufficiently to understand: For since its Matter is low and humble, it seems to have nothing that is troublesome, and difficult. But this is a great Mistake, for as Horace says of Comedy; "It is by so much the more difficult, by how much the less pardonable are the Mistakes committed in its Composition. And the same is to be thought of every thing, whose End is to please, and delight. For whatsoever is contriv'd for Pleasure, and not necessarily requir'd, unless it be exquisite, must be nauseous, and distastful; as at a Supper, scraping Musick, thick Ointment, or the like, because the Entertainment might have been without all these: For the sweetest Things, and most delicious, are most apt to satiate; for tho' the Sense may sometimes be pleas'd, yet it presently disgusts that which is luscious, and, as Lucretius phraeth it,

*E'en in the midst and fury of the Joys,
Something that's better riseth, and destroys.*

Beside,

Beside, since Pastoral is of that Nature, that it cannot endure too much Negligence, nor too scrupulous Diligence, it must be very difficult to be compos'd, especially since the Expression must be neat, but not too exquisite, and fine: It must have a simple native Beauty, but not too mean; it must have all sorts of Delicacies, and surprizing Fancies, yet not be flowing, and luxuriant. And certainly, to hit all these Excellencies is difficult enough, since Wit, whose Nature it is to pour it self forth, must rather be restrain'd than indulg'd; and that force of the Mind, which of it self is so ready to run on, must be check'd, and bridled: Which cannot be easily perform'd by any, but those who have a very good Judgment, and practically skill'd in Arts, and Sciences: And lastly, a neat, and as it were a happy Wit; not that curious sort, I mean, which Petronius allows Horace, lest too much Art should take off the Beauty of the Simplicity. And therefore I would not have any one undertake this Task, that is not very polite by Nature, and very much at leisure. For what is more hard than to be always in the Country, and yet never to be Clownish? To sing of mean, and trivial Matters, yet not trivially, and meanly? To pipe on a slender Reed, and yet keep the Sound from being harsh, and squeaking? To make every thing sweet, yet never satiate? And this I thought necessary to premise, in order to the better laying down of such Rules as I design. For the naked simplicity both of the Matter and Expression of a Pastoral, upon bare Contemplation, might seem easily to be hit, but upon Trial, 'twill be found a very hard Task: Nor was the Difficulty to be dissembled, lest Ignorance should betray some into a rash Attempt. Now I must come to the very Rules; for as nothing excellent can be brought to Perfection without Nature, (for Art unassisted by that, is vain, and ineffectual,) so there is no Nature so excellent, and happy, which by its own Strength, and without Art and Use can make any thing excellent, and great.

But

But it is hard to give Rules for that, for which there have been none already given; for where there are no Footsteps nor Path to direct, I cannot tell how any one can be certain of his Way. Yet in this difficulty, I will follow Aristotle's Example, who being to lay down Rules concerning Epicks, propos'd Homer as a Pattern, from whom he deduc'd the whole Art: So I will gather from Theocritus and Virgil, those Fathers of Pastoral, what I shall deliver on this Account. For all the Rules that are to be given of any Art, are to be given of it as excellent, and perfect, and therefore ought to be taken from them in whom it is so.

The first Rule shall be about the Matter, which is either the Action of a Shepherd, or contriv'd and fitted to the Genius of a Shepherd; for tho' Pastoral is simple, and bashful, yet it will entertain lofty Subjects, if it can be permitted to turn and fashion them to its own proper Circumstances, and Humour: Which tho' Theocritus hath never done, but kept close to Pastoral simplicity, yet Virgil hath happily attempted; of whom almost the same Character might be given, which Quintilian bestow'd on Stesichorus, who with his Harp bore up the most weighty Subjects of Epick Poetry; for Virgil sang great and lofty Things to his Oaten Reed, but yet suited to the Humour of a Shepherd, for every thing that is not agreeable to that, cannot belong to Pastoral: Of its own Nature it cannot treat of lofty and great Matters.

Therefore let Pastoral be smooth and soft, not noisy and bombast; lest whilst it raiseth its Voice, and opens its Mouth, it meet with the same fate that, they say, an Italian Shepherd did, who having a very large Mouth, and a very strong Breath, brake his Pipe as often as he blow'd it. This is a great Fault in one that writes Pastorals: For if his Words are too lounding, or his Sense too strong, he must be absurd, because indecently loud. And this is not the Rule of an unskilful impertinent Adviser, but rather of a very excellent Master in this Art; for Phabus twicht twicht Virgil by the Ear, and warn'd him to forbear great Subjects : But if it ventures upon such, it may be allow'd to use some short Invocations, and, as E-picks do, modestly implore the Assistance of a Muse. This Virgil doth in his Pollio, which is a Composure of an unusual loftiness ;

Sicilian Muse begin a loftier strain.

So he invokes Arethusa, when Cornelius Gallus, Proconsul of Egypt, and his Amours, Matters above the common reach of Pastoral, are his Subject.

One Labour more O Arethusa yield.

Why he makes his Application to Arethusa is easie to conjecture, for she was a Nymph of Sicily, and so he might hope that she could inspire him with a Genius fit for Pastorals, which first began in that Island, thus in the seventh and eighth Eclogue, as the Matter would bear, he invokes the Nymphs and Muses : And Theocritus does the same,

Tell Goddess, you can tell.

From whence it is evident that in Pastoral, tho' it never pretends to any greatness, Invocations may be allow'd : But whatever Subject it chooseth, it must take Care to accommodate it to the Genius and Circumstances of a Shepherd.

Concerning the Form, or Mode of Imitation, I shall not repeat what I have already said, viz. that this is in it self mixt ; for Pastoral is either Alternate, or hath but one Person, or is mixt of both : Yet it is properly and chiefly Alternate, as is evident from that of Theocritus.

*Sing Rural strains, for as we march along
We may delight each other with a Song.*

In which the Poet shows that alternate singing is proper to a Pastoral: But as for the Fable, 'tis requisite that it should be simple, lest instead of Pastoral it put on the Form of a Comedy, or Tragedy, if the Fable be great, or intricate, it must be One: This Aristotle thinks necessary in every Poem, and Horace lays down this general Rule,

Be every Fable simple, and but one :

For every Poem, that is not One, is imperfect, and this Unity is to be taken from the Action: For if that is One, the Poem will be so too. Such is the Passion of Corydon in Virgil's second Eclogue, Melibæus's Expostulation with Tityrus about his Fortune; Theocritus's Thyrsis, Cyclops, and Amaryllis, of which perhaps in its proper Place I may treat more largely.

Let the third Rule be concerning the Expression, which cannot be in this kind excellent, unless borrow'd from Theocritus's Idylliums, or Virgil's Eclogues; let it be chiefly simple, and ingenuous: Such is that of Theocritus,

A Kid belongs to thee, and Kids are good.

Or that in Virgil's seventh Eclogue,

This Pail of Milk, these Cakes (Priapus) every Year Expect; a little Garden is thy care:

Thou'rt Marble now, but if more Land I hold,

If my Flock thrive, thou shalt be made of Gold.

than which I cannot imagine more simple, and more ingenuous Expressions. To which may be added that out of his Palemon.

And I love Phyllis, for her Charms excel;

At my departure O what tears there fell!

She sigh'd, Farewell Dear Youth, a long Farewell.

Now,

Now, That I call an ingenuous Expression which is clear and smooth, that swells with no insolent Words, or bold Metaphors, but hath something familiar, and as it were obvious in its Composition, and not disguis'd by any study'd and affected dress: All its Ornaments must be like the Corn and Fruits in the Country, easie to be gotten, and ready at hand, not such as requires Care, Labour, and Cost to be obtain'd: As Hermogenes on Theocritus observes; see how easie and unaffected this sounds,

Pines murmurings, Goatberd, are a pleasing sound, and most of his Expressions, not to say all, are of the same Nature: For the ingenuous simplicity both of Thought and Expression is the natural Characteristick of Pastoral. In this Theocritus and Virgil are admirable, and excellent, the others despicable, and to be pittied: For they being enfeebled by the meanness of their Subject, either creep, or fall flat. Virgil keeps himself up by his choice and curious Words, and tho' his Matter for the most part (and Pastoral requires it) is mean, yet his Expressions never flag, as is evident from these Lines in his Alexis:

*The glossy Plumbs I'll bring, and juicy Pear,
Such as were once delightful to my Dear:
I'll crop the Laurel, and the Myrtle Tree,
Confus'dly set, because their Sweets agree.*

For since the Matter must be low, to avoid being abject, and despicable, you must borrow some light from the Expression; not such as is dazzling, but pure, and lambent, such as may shine thro' the whole Matter, but never flash, and blind. The Words of such a Stile we are usually taught in our Nurses Arms, but 'tis to be perfected and polished by length of time, frequent use, study, and diligent reading of the most approved Authors: For Pastoral is apt to be slighted for the meanness of its Matter, unless it hath

hath some additional Beauty, be pure, polish'd, and so made pleasing, and attractive. Therefore never let any one, that designs to write Pastorals, corrupt himself with foreign Manners; for if he hath once vitiated the healthful Habit, as I may say, of Expression, which Bucolicks necessarily require, it is impossible he should be fit for that task. Yet let him not affect pompous or dazling Expressions, for such belong to Epicks, or Tragedians. Let his Words sometimes tast of the Country, not that I mean, of which Volusus's Annals, upon which Catullus hath made that biting Epigram, are full; for though the Thought ought to be rustick, and such as is suitable to a Shepherd, yet it ought not to be Clownish, as is evident in Corydon, when he makes mention of his Goats.

*Young sportive Creatures, and of spotted hue,
Which suckled twice a Day, I keep for you :
These Thestylis hath beg'd, and beg'd in vain,
But now they're Hers, since you my Gifts disdain.*

For what can be more Rustical, than to design those Goats for Alexis, at that very time when he believes Thestylis's winning importunity will be able to prevail? Yet there is nothing Clownish in the Words. In short, Bucolicks should deserve that Commendation which Tully gives Crassus, of whose Orations he would say, that nothing could be more free from childish painting, and affected finery. So let the Expression in Pastoral be without gaudy Trappings, and all those little fineries of Art, which are us'd to set off and varnish a Discourse: But let an ingenuous Simplicity, and unaffected pleasing Neatness appear in every part; which yet will be flat, if it is drawn out to any length, if not close, short, and broken, as that in Virgil,

He that loves Bavius Verses, hates not Thine:

And

And in the same Eclogue,

— *It is not safe to drive too nigh,
The Bank may fail, the Ram is hardly dry :*

And in Corydon,

To learn this Art what won't Amyntas do ?

And in Theocritus much of the same Nature may be seen ; as in his other Pastoral Idylliums, so chiefly in his Fifth. Thus Battus in the fourth Idyllium, complaining for the loss of Amaryllis,

Dear Nymph, dear as my Goats, you dy'd.

And how soft and tender is that in the third Idyllium,

*And she may look on me, she may be won,
She may be kind, she is not perfect Stone.*

And in this concise, close way of Expression lies the chiefest Grace of Pastorals : For in my Opinion, there's nothing in the whole Composition that can delight more than those frequent stops, and breakings off. Yet lest in these too it become dull and sluggish, it must be quickned by frequent lively touches of Concernment : Such as that of the Goat-herd in the third Idyllium,

— I see that I must die :

Or Daphnis's despair, which Thyrsis sings in the first Idyllium,

*Ye Wolves, and Pards, and Mountain Bears adieu,
The Herdsmen now must walk no more with You.*

How tender are the Lines, and yet what Passion they contain ! And most of Virgil's are of this Nature, but there are likewise in him some touches of despairing Love, such as is this of Alphesibaus.

Nor have I any mind to be reliev'd :

Or that of Damon,

I'll die, yet tell my Love e'en whilst I die :

Or that of Corydon,

He lov'd, but could not hope for Love again.

For tho' Pastoral doth not admit any violent Passions, such as proceed from the greatest Extremity, and usually accompany despair ; yet because despairing Love is not attended with those frightful and horrible Consequences, but looks more like Grief to be pittied, and a pleasing Madness, than Rage and Fury, Eclogue is so far from refusing, that it rather loves, and passionately requires them. Therefore an unfortunate Shepherd may be brought in, complaining of his successful Love to the Moon, Stars, or Rocks, or to the Woods, and purling Streams, mourning the unsupportable anger, the frowns and coyness of his proud Phyllis ; singing at his Nymph's Door, ( which Plutarch reckons among the signs of Passion ) or doing any of those fooleries, which are familiar to Lovers. Yet the Passion must not rise too high, as Polyphemus's, Galateas's mad Lover, of whom Theocritus divinely thus, as almost of every Thing else :

*His was no common flame, nor could he move
In the old Arts, and beaten paths of Love,
No Flowers, nor Fruits sent to oblige the Fair,
His was all Rage, and Madness.*

For all violent Perturbations are to be diligently avoided

voided by Buclicks, whose Nature it is to be soft, and easy: For in small Matters, and such must all the Strifes and Contentions of Shepherds be, to make a great deal ado, is as unseemly, as to put Hercules's Vizard and Buskins on an Infant, as Quintilian hath excellently observ'd. For since Eclogus is but weak, it seems not capable of those Commotions which belong to the Theater, and Pulpit; they must be soft, and gentle, and all its Passion must seem to flow only, and not break out: As in Virgil's Gallus,

*Ab! far from home and me you wander o're
The Alpine snows, the farthest Western shore,
And frozen Rhine. When are we like to meet?
Ab gently, gently, lest thy tender Feet
Sharp Ice may wound.*

To these he may sometimes join some short Interrogations made to inanimate Beings, for those spread a strange Life and Vigour thro' the whole Composure. Thus in Daphnis,

Did not You Streams, and Hazels, bear the Nymphs?

Or give the very Trees, and Fountains sense, as in Tityrus,

*Thee (Tityrus) the Pines, and every Vale,
The Fountains, Hills, and every Shrub did call:*

for by this the Concernment is express'd; and of the like Nature is that of Thyrsis, in Virgil's Melibaeus.

When Phyllis comes, my Wood will all be green.

And this sort of Expression is frequent in Theocritus, and Virgil, and in these the delicacy of Pastoral is principally contain'd, as one of the old Interpreters of Theocritus hath observ'd on this Line, in the eighth Idyllium.

Ye Vales, and Streams, a Race Divine.

But let them be so, and so seldom us'd, that nothing appear vehement, and bold, for Boldness and Vehemence destroy the Sweetness which peculiarly commends Bucolicks, and in those Compositures a constant Care to be soft and easie should be chief: For Pastoral bears some Resemblance to Terence, of whom Tully, in that Poem which he writes to Lib, gives this Character;

His Words are soft, and each Expression sweet.

In mixing Passion in Pastorals, that Rule of Longinus's golden Treatise de Sublimis, must be observ'd; Never use it, but when the Matter requires it, and then too very sparingly.

Concerning the Numbers, in which Pastoral should be written, this is my Opinion; the Heroick Measure, but not so strong and sounding as in Epicks, is to be chosen. Virgil and Theocritus have given us Examples; for tho' Theocritus hath in one Idyllium mix'd other Numbers, yet that can be of no force against all the rest; and Virgil useth no Numbers but Heroick, from whence it may be inferr'd, that those are the fittest.

Pastoral may sometimes admit plain, but not long Narrations, such as Socrates in Plato requires in a Poet; for he chiefly approves those who use a plain Narration, and commends that above all other which is short, and fitly expresseth the Nature of the Thing. Some are of Opinion that Bucolicks cannot endure Narrations, especially if they are very long, and imagine there are none in Virgil; but they have not been nice enough in their Observations, for there are some, as that in Silenus:

*Young Chromis and Mnafylus chanc'd to stray,
Where (sleeping in a Cave) Silenus lay,
Whose constant Cups fly fuming to his Brain,
And always boil in each extended Vein :
His trusty Flaggon, full of potent Juice,
Was hanging by, worn out with Age, and Use, &c.*

But because Narrations are so seldom to be found in Theocritus, and Virgil, I think they ought not to be often us'd ; yet if the Matter will bear it, I believe such as Socrates would have, may very fitly be made use of.

The Composition will be more suitable to the Genius of a Shepherd, if now and then there are some short Turns and Digressions from the Purpose. Such is that concerning Pasiphae in Silenus, although it is almost too long ; but we may give Virgil a little leave, who takes so little Liberty himself.

Concerning Descriptions I cannot tell what to lay down, for in this Matter our Guides, Virgil, and Theocritus, do not very well agree. For he in his first Idyllium makes such a long immoderate Description of his Cup, that Criticks find fault with him, but no such Description appears in all Virgil ; for how sparing is he in his Description of Melibaeus's Beechen Pot, the Work of Divine Atimeda ? He doth it in five Verses, Theocritus runs out into thirty, which certainly is an Argument, of a Wit that is very much at leisure, and unable to moderate his Force. That Shortness which Virgil hath prudently made choice of, is in my Opinion much better ; for a Shepherd, who is naturally incurious, and unobserving, cannot think that it is his Duty to be exact in Particulars, and describe every thing with an accurate Niceness ; yet Ronsardus hath done it, a Man of most correct Judgment, and, in Imitation of Theocritus, hath, considering the then Poverty of our Language, admirably and largely describ'd his Cup; and Marinus in his Idylliums hath follow'd the same Example. He never keeps within Compass in his Descriptions, for which he is deservedly blam'd; let those who would be thought accurate, and Men of Judgment, follow Virgil's prudent Moderation. Nor can the others gain any Advantage from Moschus's Europa, in which the Description of the Basket is very long, for that Idyllium is not Pastoral; yet I confess, that some Descriptions of such trivial things, if not minutely accurate, may, if seldom us'd, be decently allow'd a Place in the Discourses of Shepherds.

But tho' you must be sparing in your Descriptions, yet your Comparisons must be frequent, and the more often you use them, the better and more graceful will be the Composition; especially if taken from such things, as the Shepherds must be familiarly acquainted with. They are frequent in Theocritus, but so proper to the Country, that none but a Shepherd dare use them. Thus Menalcas in the eighth Idyllium:

*Rough Storms to Trees, to Birds the treacherous Snare,
Are frightful Evils; Springs to the Hare,
Soft Virgins Love to Man, &c.*

And Damatas in Virgil's Palamon,

Wolves Sheep destroy, Winds Trees when newly blown, Storms Corn, and me my Amaryllis frown.

And that in the eighth Eclogue,

*As Clay grows hard, Wax soft in the same Fire,
So Daphnis does in one extream Desire.*

And such Comparisons are very frequent in him, and very suitable to the Genius of a Shepherd; as likewise often Repetitions, and Doublings of some Words; which, if they are luckily plac'd, have an inexpressible Quaintness, and make the Numbers extream

Part III. upon PASTORALS.

extream sweet, and the Turns ravishing and delightful. An Instance of this we have in Virgil's Melibæus;

(Tree,
Phyllis the Hazel loves ; whilst Phyllis loves that Myrtles than Hazels of less Fame shall be.

As for the Manners of your Shepherds, they must be such as theirs who liv'd in the Islands of the Happy or Golden Age ; they must be candid, simple, and ingenuous ; Lovers of Goodness, and Justice, affable, and kind ; Strangers to all Fraud, Contrivance, and Deceit ; in their Love modest, and chaste, not one suspicious Word, no loose Expression to be allow'd ; and in this part Theocritus is faulty, Virgil never : and this Difference perhaps is to be ascrib'd to their Ages, the times in which the latter liv'd being more polite, civil, and genteel. And therefore those who make wanton Love-stories the Subject of Pastorals, are in my Opinion very unadvis'd ; for all sort of Lewdness or Debauchery are directly contrary to the Innocence of the Golden Age. There is another thing in which Theocritus is faulty, and that is making his Shepherds too sharp, and abusive to one another ; Comatas and Lacon are ready to fight, and the railing between those two is as bitter as Billingsgate. Now certainly such Raillery cannot be suitable to those sedate times of the Happy Age.

As for Sentences, if weighty, and philosophical, common Sense tells us they are not fit for a Shepherd's Mouth. Here Theocritus cannot be altogether excus'd, but Virgil deserves no Reprehension. But Proverbs justly challenge Admission into Pastorals, nothing being more common in the Mouths of Country-men, than old Sayings.

Thus much seem'd necessary to be premis'd out of RAPIN, for the Direction and Information of the Reader.

THEOCRITUS.

By BASIL KENNET, M. A.

AMong all the Complaints that have been made against the Old Tribe of Grammarians and Commentators, there is not one with less Injustice taken up, than that which taxes them with their hard usage of Theocritus's Story. For, as if it were impossible for them to agree in their Verdict, tho' upon the plainst Evidence; we find them strangely divided in their Accounts of the Age and Country of this Poet; when, all the while, he himself, if they would have taken his Word, has settled both the Points beyond Dispute.

In an Epigram commonly set in the Front of his Poem, and perhaps according to the Author's Original ginal Design, he thus acquaints us with his City and Family.

Ἄλλῳ ὁ Χῖος· ἐγὼ δὲ Θεόκριτος ὃς τὰδε γράφα.
 Ἐῖς ἀπὸ τῶν πολλῶν ἐμὶ Συρηκοσίων,
 Τῷ Πραξαγόρῳ τευκλεΐδῃ τε Φιλίνῃς,
 Μέσαν δ' ὀδυνεῖν ἔποτ' ἐφελκυσάμην.

Chios can lay no Title to My Muse;
 But I'm Theocritus of Syracuse,
Praxagoras and fam'd Philina's Son;
 And I ne'er wrote a Verse but was my own.

And then, as to his Age, one would think it were impossible that should raise a Quarrel, while the two Idylliums remain, address'd to Hiero King of Syracuse, and to Ptolemy Philadelphus of Egypt. This Hiero was the same famous Prince whose Actions are recorded in the first Book of Polybius's History. He recover'd the Regal Honour to his Family, after it had been lost almost Two Hundred Years: Beginning his Reign in the Second Year of the 126th Olympiad, as Casaubon has made out in his Observations on that Historian*. Tho' Pausanias † makes him to have obtain'd the Crown in the Second Year of the 120th Olympiad; and tho' Casaubon, when he wrote his Lectures on Theocritus ‡, has follow'd Pausanias in the Mistake. As for Ptolemy Philadelphus, the Commencement of his Reign is constantly fix'd in the 123d Olympiad.

Hiero, tho' a Prince who made a great noise in the World by the Fortune of his Arms, and by the Fame of his good Government; yet seems to have express'd no great Affection for Letters. Which is suppos'd to have been the occasion of Theocritus's Sixteenth Idyllium, inscrib'd with Hiero's Name:

 Where

Where the Poet asserts the Dignity of his own Profession, complains of the poor Encouragement it met with in the World ; and after a very Artificial Manner, touching on some of the Noblest Virtues of the Prince, shows what a brave Figure he would have made in Verse, had he been as good a Patron, as he was an Argument, to the Muses.

It is probable, this Unkindness of Hiero was the main reason which prevail'd with Theocritus to leave Sicily for the Egyptian Court ; where King Ptolemy then sat, Supreme President of Arts and War. And we may guess, that the Poet met with kinder Entertainment at Alexandria, than he had enjoy'd at Syracuse, from his famous Panegyrick on Ptolemy, which makes his Seventeenth Idyllium ; and in which, after the Praises of his Race, his Power, and his Riches, he extols his Generous Protection of Learning and Ingenuity, as something beyond the degree of common Virtues and Excellencies.

There are no farther Memorials of the Poet's Life to be gather'd from his Works, except his Friendship with Aratus the famous Author of the Phænomena. To Him he addresses his Sixth Idyllium ; His Loves he describes in the Seventh ; and from Him he borrows the pious Beginning of the Seventeenth.

Theocritus lies under an unhappy Censure in relation to his Death. For if Ovid means Him by the Syracusan Poet in his Ibis, he must seem to have suffer'd, either from his own, or from other Hands, the shameful Fate of a Malefactor *. But it will not be very insolent to say, that in such a trivial Business Ovid himself might be mistaken. For tho' the Old Commentators on the place, tell us a grave Story of Theocritus's Execution, as there hinted at, and the occasion of it ; yet it is possible the whole matter may lie in confounding Theocritus the Rhetorician of Chios, with Theocritus the Poet of Syracuse ; tho' the

* *Uique Syracosio praestrictâ fauce Poëta,
Sic anima laqueo sit via clausa tua.*

Latter in his Epigram already set down, has taken particular Care to be known and distinguish'd from his Name-sake. Now it is true enough, as Plutarch*, and Macrobius † will witness, that Theocritus of Chios was Executed, by order of King Antigonus : And the reason of his Misfortune was his most unseasonable Wit. For having committed a very high Crime against that Prince ( who, by the way had but one Eye ) and He promising him a Pardon, provided he would come into his Presence to accept it; his Friends were very urgent in hastening his Journey to Court, and told him he need not question having his Life sav'd, as soon as ever he should appear to his Majesty's Eyes : Nay then, ( cry'd Theocritus ) I am a Dead Man, if that be the only Condition of my Pardon. And this coming to Antigonus's Ear, He justly esteem'd the Railery an addition to the former Treason, and accordingly order'd Justice to proceed.

It cannot fairly be omitted, that the attributing the Fate of Theocritus the Rhetorician to Theocritus the Poet, was an easier slip, in as much as the former also pretended to some knack in Verse, and has an Epigram or two preserv'd in Laertius and Plutarch.

Tho' Theocritus passes in common Esteem, for no more than a Pastoral Poet; yet he is manifestly robb'd of great part of his Fame, if his other Pieces have not their proper Laurels. For (not to speak of the few little Epigrams) as the larger share of his Idylliums, cannot properly be call'd the Songs of Shepherds, so they are in too great repute, to be banished from the Character of their Author.

At the same time he ought, no doubt to lay his Pastorals, as the Foundation of his Credit. And upon the Claim he will be admitted for the happy Finisher, as well as for the Inventor of his Art; and will be acknowledg'd to have excell'd all his following Rivals, as much as Originals usually do their Copies. He has the same Advantage in the Rural, as Homer had in the Epick Poesy; and that was, to make the Criticks turn His Practice into Eternal Rules, and to measure Nature her self by his accomplish'd Model. And therefore, as to enumerate the Glories of Heroick Numbers is the same Thing, as to cast up the Sum of Homer's Praises; so to set down all the Beauties of Pastoral Verse, is no more than an indirect way of making so many short Panegyricks on Theocritus. Indeed, Theocritus has been so much happier than Homer, as Virgil's Eclogues are reckon'd more unequal Imitations than his Aeneis.

It must be own'd, that the Dialect which Theocritus wrote in, has a great share in his Honours. The old Dorian Phrase seems to have been introduc'd on purpose for these Compositions: Or one would think this was the plain Language of the Golden Age; and that the Poet had express'd the Speech of these good Mortals, as well as the Manners. On the other hand, many excellent Judges have maintain'd, that his Muse now and then, rather shows her ill-breeding than her simplicity: That her Country Air and Tone are both a little uncouth; at least, that they appear so to the elegance and the niceness of Modern Times. Now to this Censure it might, with Submission, be return'd; that unless the Shepherds are allow'd some ruder Liberties in their Words and Carriage, they will seem to be abridg'd of the Privileges of their Nature and their Condition. Fortho' they ought not to be either grossly stupid, or critically refin'd; yet it would be a safer Error to let them smell rank of the Field, than to deck them with the least spruceness of the City. We see the ill Effects of the contrary practice, in the famous Pastorals of the Italians and of the French, who have turn'd their Swains into Courtiers, for fear of making them Clowns.

It seems indeed, reasonable enough, that the Purity of Modern Tongues should not admit the use of a grosser Dialect, even in Pastoral Pieces: Tho', as for our selves, the Scotch-Songs which pass with so much applause, show that it is not impossible to revive this old Conduct among Us with Success. However, Theocritus is not to be judg'd by the Manners of our Times, but by his own. We must not conceive the Performers in His Pastorals like those in Spencer's.

Feeding their Flocks upon the Hills of Kent.

But in the rude Fields of Ancient Sicily: And here they may be as rustick as they please; without offence; tho' there perhaps they ought to have been more cautious and more decent.

It is certain Quintilian, however he has been of late misconstrued, never intended his Judgment on Theocritus for a Reproach, when he observes, that His Rustical Muse was not only afraid to appear in the Forum but even in the City*. For the Rhetorician could mean no more, but that the Language and the Thoughts of Theocritus's Shepherds ought neither to be imitated in publick speaking, nor in any Gallant Compofure. Yet the Poet might for all this, be admirable in his way, as indeed, Quintilian in the same place expressly pronounces him.

But should the Dialect of Theocritus not be admitted among his Graces, he can produce enough besides to secure his Rural Crown from the boldest Competitor. Mr. Dryden acknowledges him to have been rais'd above Virgil himself, by the inimitable tenderness of his Passions; by the propriety of his Wit, never departing from the Plains and Cottages; and by an Art that he has of betraying his Learning; (as his Nymphs do their Love) meerly by endeavouring to conceal it. These Excellencies Mr. Dryden † would fix to distinguish the Sicilian Poet, from all others in the World: And to pretend to confirm His Judgment, would be the same rashness as to oppose it.

To say nothing of Virgil, who disdains a meaner Censor, as well as a meaner Translator than Mr. Dryden; it will be no breach of Modesty to affirm, that the greatest part of the succeeding Pastorals, are as far distant from these Ornaments, as from the Age that produc'd them for their Patterns. The Persons introduc'd have not only the Speech, but the Address and the Carriage of Gentlemen: Their Love is the highest Gallantry, and their Wit the choicest Invention. Our own incomparable Sir Philip Sidney has fallen into the common Humour, tho' not in the common fault. Some of his Shepherds talk in as fine a Strain of Sense and Elegancy, as if each was a true Philisides: Showing Wits (as Palladius observ'd) that might better become such Shepherds as Homer speaks of, who are Governors of the People, than such Senators who hold their Council in a Sheep-cote *. But then with what a matchless Judgment has that Noble Author fram'd a Necessity for his Practice? The Old Epick Poets, when their Heroes accomplish any Adventure that seems plac'd beyond the reach of Human Force, save the Probability, by joining the miraculous assistance of the Gods: And, Sir Philip, when his Rural Lovers act and talk above the Nature and Character of the Common Inhabitants of the Plains, refers the whole Business to the extraordinary Influence of Heaven. He is careful to let us know, that the particular Favour of Providence had not impos'd distinguish'd His Arcadia from other Countries by the Benefits of the Climate and of the Soil, than by the Parts and the Wisdom of the People, and that these were as Common Blessings as the others: The Muses having chose this Country for their chief repairing Place; and having bestow'd their Gifts so largely here, that the very SHEPHERDS had their Fancies lifted to so high Conceits, as the Learned of other Nations were content both to borrow their Names, and to imitate their Cunning*.

Those Idyllisms of Theocritus, which are not admitted for Pastorals, are of so different kinds, that no Man has yet attempted to reduce them into Classes. Salmasius † contents himself to say, that we may call them what we please besides Pastoral Verses. And, Heinsius ‡ tho' he tells us he could distinguish them, yet wisely declares he will leave the Task, for other Men to try their Judgments upon. But perhaps it would save a needless Trouble to call them altogether by the Modern Name of Poems on several Occasions. And this Notion Heinsius himself must in some measure favour; while he observes that the Ancients gave them the Title of Idyllium for no other reason, but to express the variety of their Natures. But tho' they cannot be divided into Heads fit to express their form, yet they may fall under such as will distinguish their Praises. For the Nine first, and the Eleventh, being all that are acknowledg'd true Pastorals, there are abundance of others, which are therefore only not Pastorals, because the Scene of Business does not lie in the Plains and Feeding Grounds, but in some other part of the Country; not among the Shepherds, but among their Neighbours as rude and simple as themselves: Such as the Reapers in the Tenth Idyllium, the Gossips in the Fifteenth, the Fishermen in the Twenty-first, &c. Now these Pieces have a right to most of the fine things that are usually said of the Pastorals, to which they are so nearly ally'd. Several others of the Idylliums are little Copies directed to private Friends, on some particular Account; as the Twelfth, the Twenty-eighth, the Twenty-ninth, &c. These neither agree all in Dialect, nor in Measures, yet for their general Air of familiar Simplicity and Morality, meet with a common Esteem. The Nineteenth and the Thirtieth, on Cupid stung by a Bee, and on The Death of Adonis, seem both to be written with the Spirit and the Delicacy of Anacreon; the latter only having the farther Benefit of His Numbers: Tho' the first too has now recover'd that Advantage in the English which it wanted in the Greek.

But the most admir'd among these Miscellaneous Pieces, are the Panegyricks and the Hymns, address'd to Ptolemy, Hiero, Castor, and Pollux, and Hercules; by which Theocritus has shown, that he (as well as Virgil did afterwards) could upon occasion, raise his Sicilian Muse to a loftier Strain; that he understood the Gaiety and Wisdom of the Court, and the Bravery of the Camp, as well as the simple honesty and hardiness of the Country: And, in short, that he could as well sing the Combats of Heroes, as the Contentions of Shepherds.

A Goatherd persuades the Shepherd THYRSIS to bewail DAPHNIS, who dy'd for Love; and gives him a large Cup and Goat for a Reward. The Scene Sicily, about the River Himera.

THYRSIS.

Goatherd, that Pine-trees Boughs by yonder Spring,
In pleasing Murmurs mix, and sweetly sing:
And thou dost sweetly pipe, dear charming Swain,
And well deserv'st the next Reward to Pan:
If he must have a Kid, a Goat's thy Due;
If he a Goat, a Kid belongs to you:
And that's no mean Reward, for Kids are good;
And 'till they're milk'd, the Flesh is dainty Food.

GOATHERD.

And sweeter Notes thy Pipe, dear Shepherd, fill,
Than murmuring Springs, that rowl from yonder Hill.
When Muses claim a Sheep, a Lamb's thy Due;
When they a Lamb, thou shalt receive a Eve.

And will you, by the Nymphs, grant one Desire?
 Will you to neighbouring Meads retire,
 And sit and pipe? Come, show thy Wood and rom Skill, I'll thank thee for, and feed thy Goats the while.

GOATHERD.

I dare not, Faith, I dare not pipe at Noon,
 Afraid of Pan; for when his Hunting's done,
 And he lies down to sleep by purling Streams,
 He's very touchy, if we break his Dreams.
 But, Thyrsis, (for you know fair Daphne pains,
 And sings the best of all the tuneful Swains)
 Let's go and sit beneath yon Myrtle Boughs,
 Where Pan and Trippus, and the Nymphs Repose,
 Where thy Hut built, and many an Acorn grows; }
 And there, if thou wilt pipe as sweet a Lay,
 As when you strove with * Crome, and won the Day,
 I'll give thee my best Goat, a lovely white;
 She suckles two, yet fills three Pails at Night;
 Besides a Cup, with sweetest Wax o'erlay'd,
 A fine two-handled Pot, and newly made;
 Still of the Tool it smells, it neatly shines,
 And round the Brim a creeping Ivy twines,
 With Crocus mix'd, where seem the Kids to brouze;
 The Berries crop, and wanton in the Boughs:
 Within a Woman sits, a Work divine,
 Thro' envious Veils her dazling Beauties shine,
 And all around neat Woers offer Love,
 They strive, they quarrel, but they cannot move;
 Now smiling here, now there she casts her Eyes,
 And now to these, now those her Mind applies;
 Whilst they, their Eyes swoln big with watchful Pain,
 Still love, still beg, but all, poor Hearts, in vain.
 Near these, a Fisher on white Rocks is set,
 He seems to gather up to cast his Net;
 He stands as labouring, and his Limbs appear
 All stretch'd, and in his Face mix Hope and Fear;

 On either Side a Fox; one widely gapes,
 He eyes the Vines, and spoils the rip'ning Grapes:
 The other minds the Scrip, resolv'd to seize,
 And rob the Fondling of his Bread and Cheese;
 Whilst he sits idly busy, neatly ties
 Soft tender Twigs, and frames a Net for Flies;

PAN.

* Some take αἰολικόν as relating to the Country, and could not have Calydon in the next Line, to be a proper Name.

† Heinfius reads ἐπ' ἱμερᾶ ἑμῶν, right, no doubt,
 but it matters little.

|| Some read α δῖον α, some α δῖα.

Pan, raise my Voice, Pan, move my learned Tongue,
Begin, sweet Muse, begin the rural Song.

For him the Wolves, the Fards, and Tygers moan'd;
For him with frightful Grief the Lions groan'd.

Pan, raise my Voice, Pan, move my learned Tongue,
Begin, sweet Muse, begin the rural Song.

A thousand Heifers, Bulls, and Cows, and Steers,
Lay round his Feet, and melted into Tears.

Pan, raise my Voice, Pan, move my learned Tongue,
Begin, sweet Muse, begin the rural Song.

First Hermes came, and with a gentle Touch,
He rais'd, and ask'd him whom he lov'd so much?

Pan, raise my Voice, Pan, move my learned Tongue,
Begin, sweet Muse, begin the rural Song.

The Plough-men, Herds-men, and the Shepherds, came,
And ask'd what Hl? and what had rais'd the Flame?

Priapus came from neighbouring Shades, and said,
Poor Daphnis, why dost pine? why hang thy Head?

* While o'er the Fields the Nymph repeats her Pain,
And calls the Woods, and chides the perjur'd Swain.

Pan, raise my Voice, Pan, move my learned Tongue,
Begin, sweet Muse, begin the rural Song.

Ah, Daphnis, loose and wanton in thy Love!
A Herds-man thought, thou dost a Goatherd prove!

A Goatherd, when he sees the Kids at Rut,
Sits down, and grieves that he's not born a Goat.

Thus, when you see the Virgins dance, you grieve
Because refus'd, and now disdain to live.

Pan, raise my Voice, Pan, move my learned Tongue,
Begin, sweet Muse, begin the rural Song.

All this young Daphnis heard; but mute he sate,
Indulg'd his Grief, and hasten'd to his Fate.

Pan, raise my Voice, Pan, move my learned Tongue,
Begin, sweet Muse, begin the rural Song.

Then Venus came, a Smile her Face possess'd,
A faint half Smile, fierce Anger fill'd her Breast;

And said, Well, Daphnis, you could fight with Love,
With what Success the haughty Shepherd strove!
You scorn'd his Bow, and you his Darts disgrac'd;
But, Daphnis, was not Love too strong at last?

Pan, raise my Voice, Pan, move my learned Tongue;

Begin, sweet Muse, begin the rural Song.

And thus the Youth reply'd, Disdainful Foe,

Ah, cruel Venus, curs'd by all below.

The * Sun hath told, I fall, but still shall prove;

'Midst Shades below, a deadly Plague to Love.

Pan, raise my Voice, Pan, move my learned Tongue;

Begin, sweet Muse, begin the rural Song.

Go, go to Ida, there, as Story goes,

Are Scenes of Pleasure, there Amphises does —

Go, Venus, there are Shades and Cypress Bowers,

And labouring Bees buz o'er the rising Flowers.

Pan, raise my Voice, Pan, move my learned Tongue;

Begin, sweet Muse, begin the rural Song.

There lives Adonis, there the wood-van Pain,

There feeds his Sheep, his Dogs, his Beasts, and haunts the Hare.

Pan, raise my Voice, Pan, move my learned Tongue;

Begin, sweet Muse, begin the rural Song.

Go now, stout Dithiad, go, soon persevere,

Go, nose him now, and boast, my Arts o'erthrew.

Young Daphnis fight, for I'm a Match for you.

Pan, raise my Voice, Pan, move my learned Tongue;

Begin, sweet Muse, begin the rural Song.

Ye Wolves, ye Lions, and ye Boars, adieu;

For Daphnis walks no more in Woods with you.

Adieu, fair Aréthuse, fair Streams that swell

Thro' Thymbrian Plains, ye silver Streams, farewell.

Pan, raise my Voice, Pan, move my learned Tongue;

Begin, sweet Muse, begin the rural Song.

That, Daphnis, I that here my Oxen fed,

That here my Bulls and Cows to Water led.

Pan;

Pan, raise my Voice, Pan, move my learned Tongue,
Begin, sweet Muse, begin the rural Song.

Pan, Pan, where e'er you keep your Sylvan Court,
Whether on Lyce's Tops the Satyrs sport,
Or wanton o'er the high Menalian Hill,
We beg thee visit Sicily's fair Isle,
Leave Helike's Cliff, from Licon's Tomb remove,
A Tomb to be admir'd by Gods above.

Pan, raise my Voice, Pan, move my learned Tongue,
Begin, sweet Muse, begin the rural Song.

Come, mighty King, come, Pan, and take my Pipe,
Well join'd with Wax, and fitted to my Lip;
For now 'tis useless grown, Love stops my Breath,
I cannot pipe, but must be mute in Death.

Pan, raise my Voice, Pan, move my learned Tongue,
Begin, sweet Muse, begin the rural Song.

On ev'ry Shrub and Thorn, let Lillies smile,
Let Privet Berries stain the Daffadil;
Let all Things change, the Pine-tree's lofty Head
Let mellow Pears adorn, since Daphnis dead;
Let Deer pursue the Dogs, on ev'ry Bush
Let Schreech-Owls sit, and chatter with the Thrush.

Pan, raise my Voice no more, Pan, stop my Tongue,
End, Muses, end, end, Muse, the rural Song.

This said, he dy'd, fair Venus rubb'd the Swain,
And idly strove to bring him back again;
For cruel Fate had broken ev'ry Thread,
And o'er the Stygian Lake young Daphnis fled:
The cruel Waves enclos'd the lovely Boy,
The Nymphs Delight, and Muses chiefest Joy.

Pan, raise my Voice no more, Pan, stop my Tongue,
End Muses, end, end, Muse, the rural Song.

Give me the Cup, the promis'd Goat produce,
That I may milk, and offer to my Muse.
Hail, Muses, hail, all hail, ye sacred Nine,
I'll still improve, and make my Song divine.

O R,

The Inchantment.

Samoetha being forsaken by Delphis, resolves to try the Force of Charms to recover his Affection ; applies herself to the Moon, as a powerful Goddess in both those Matters ; and after she hath sent away her Maid, tells the Story of her Misfortune.

To GEORGE PITT, Jun. Esq;

M Aid, where's my Laurel? Oh! my raging Soul!
 Maid, where's the Potion? Fill the Bason full,
 And crown the narrow Brim with Purple Wooll,
 That I might charm my false, my perjur'd Swain,
 And force him back into my Arms again ;
 For cruel he these twelve long Days is fled,
 And knows not whether I'm alive or dead.
 He hath not broke my Doors these twelve long Days ;
 Ah ! me, perhaps his varying Love decays ;
 Or he with Joy another Face surveys.

Pll

I'll run to Morrow to the Fencing-House,
 And ask him what he means to use me thus?
 But now I'll charm him; Morn, shine bright and clear,
 To thee I will direct my secret Pray'r;
 To thee and Hecate, whom Dogs do dread,
 When stain'd with Gore, she stalks amidst the Dead,
 Hail, frightful Hecate, assist me still,
 Make mine as great as fam'd Medea's Skill.

* Jynx, restore my false, my perjur'd Swain,
 And force him back into my Arms again.

First burn the Flow'r, then strew the † other on;
 Strew it. How? Where's your Sense and Duty gone?
 Bafe Thestylis! and am I so forlorn,
 And grown so low, that I'm become your Scorn?
 But strew the † Salt, and say in angry Tones,
 I scatter Delphid's, perjur'd Delphid's Bones.

Jynx, restore my false, my perjur'd Swain,
 And force him back into my Arms again.

First Delphid injur'd me, he rais'd my Flame,
 And now I burn this Bough in Delphid's Name.
 As this doth blaze, and break away in flame,
 (How soon it takes!) let Delphid's Flesh consume.

Jynx, restore my false, my perjur'd Swain,
 And force him back into my Arms again.

As this devoted Wax melts o'er the Fire,
 Let Mindian Delphid melt in warm Desire;
 And, Venus, as I whirl this brazen Bowl,
 Before my Doors let perjur'd Delphid rowl.

Jynx, restore my false, my perjur'd Swain,
 And force him back into my Arms again.

Now, now I strow the Flow'r; Moon, you can bow
 Ev'n Rhadamanth, and all that's fierce below.
 Hark, Thestylis, our Dogs begin to howl;
 The Goddess comes, go beat the brazen Bowl.

*Jynx, restore my false, my perjur'd Swain,
And force him back into my Arms again.*

The Sea grows smooth, and East becalms the Wind,
But Griefs still rage, and tofs my troubl'd Mind.
I burn for him, for him whose Arts betray'd
And wrought my Shame, for I'm no more a Maid.

*Jynx, restore my false, my perjur'd Swain,
And force him back into my Arms again.*

Thrice, thrice I pour, and thrice repeat my Charms,
Whatever Boy or Maid now fills his Arms;
Let dark Oblivion spread o'er Delphid's Mind,
As dark as that, that once did * Theſeus blind,
When he at Naxos left his Love behind.

Hippomanes, a Plant Arcadia bears;
This makes Steeds mad, and this excites the Mares;
And oh! that I could see my Delphid come
From th' Oly Fencing-Houſe so raving Home.

*Jynx, restore my false, my perjur'd Swain,
And force him back into my Arms again.*

This Piece from dear false Delphid's Garment torn,
I tear again, and am resolv'd to burn.
Ah! cruel Love! ah! most relentless God!
Why like a Leech still eager on his Food,
Wound'st thou my Heart, and suck'st out all my Blood?

*Jynx, restore my false, my perjur'd Swain,
And force him back into my Arms again.*

A Lizzard squeez'd, shall make a pow'rful Bowl
To Morrow, strong, to tame his stubborn Soul.
Now take these Poysons, I'll procure thee more,
And strew them at the Threshold of his Door;
That Door where raging Love has fix'd my Mind,
Tho' he regards not; cruel and unkind!
Strew them, and spitting, say, in angry Tones,
I scatter Delphid's, perjur'd Delphid's Bones.

*Jynx, restore my false, my perjur'd Swain,
And force him back into my Arms again.*

* The Story of Theſeus and Ariadne is known.

Now I'm alone, shall I lament my State?
 But where shall I begin? What wrought my Fate?
Anaxo, Eubul's Daughter, neatly drest,
 Begg'd me to go and see Diana's Feast;
 For Fame had told wild Beasts must there be shown
 In solemn Pomp, a Lyness was one.

*Tell, sacred Moon, what first did raise my Flame,
 And whence my Pain, and whence my Passion came?*
 With her's my Nurse did all her Vows unite,
 And bad me go, for 'twould be worth my Sight;
 So forc'd, and finely dress'd, in Pomp and State,
 I went, attended by an evil Fate.

*Tell, sacred Moon, what first did raise my Flame,
 And whence my Pain, and whence my Passion came?*
 Near Lycos's House break thro' the yielding Throng,
 I saw my Delphi, vigorous, stout, and young;
 A Golden Down spread o'er his youthful Chin,
 His Breast, bright Moon, was brighter far than thine;
 For spread with glorious Oyl, he lately came
 From noble Fencing, and from winning Fame.

*Tell, sacred Moon, what first did raise my Flame,
 And whence my Pain, and whence my Passion came?*
 Oh! when I saw, how did the Sight surprize!
 My Soul took Fire, and sparkled thro' my Eyes;
 My Colour chang'd, regardless of the Show,
 I hasted Home, but came I know not how;
 A burning Fever seiz'd my thoughtful Head,
 And twelve long Days and Nights I kept my Bed.

*Tell, sacred Moon, what first did raise my Flame,
 And whence my Pain, and whence my Passion came?*
 My rosy Colour dy'd into a pale,
 My Eyes grew dim, my Hair began to fall;
 Mere Skin and Bones I liv'd, I breath'd and pray'd,
 And fought to ev'ry cunning Man for Aid;
 All Charms were try'd, and various Figures cast,
 But ah! no Help, and Time did swiftly wast.

*Tell, sacred Moon, what first did raise my Flame,
 And whence my Pain, and whence my Passion came?*

At last I told my Maid the madd'ning Pain,
Go, Thistylis, have Pity on my Love;
Go find some Cure to ease my smart;
Young Delphid is the Tyrant of my Heart;
Go to the Fencing-House, there is his Bed;
For there he walks, and there he loves.

Tell, sacred Moon, what first did raise my Flame,
And whence my Pain, and whence my Passion came?
And if alone, give him a gentle Nod,
And softly tell him, that Samartha would (Speak, speak, tho' modest Fear does make thee dumb)
Enjoy him here, and beg him he would come.
She went, she found, and told him what I said;
He gladly heard, and eagerly obey'd.
But when he came, how great was the Surprise!
Chills shook my Soul, and I grew cold as Ice.

Tell, sacred Moon, what first did raise my Flame,
And whence my Pain, and whence my Passion came?
Cold Sweat flow'd down my Cheeks, like driving Rain,
And when I strove to speak, I strove in vain;
No Noise would come, not such as lull'd in Rest
Young Infants, murmur o'er their Mother's Breast;
No Sign of Life did thro' my Limbs appear,
But I grew stiff, stiff as this Gold I wear.

Tell, sacred Moon, what first did raise my Flame,
And whence my Pain, and whence my Passion came?
Then cruel he fate down; he press'd my Bed,
His Eyes were fix'd, and as he fate, he said,
Samartha, you do me as far surpass,
As I Philistus, when we ran the Race;
Too quick for me in this your kind Intent,
You did my Haste, tho' not my Wish prevent.

Tell, sacred Moon, what first did raise my Flame,
And whence my Pain, and whence my Passion came?
For I had come at Night; by Love, 'tis true;
Unsent for; I had come to wait on you;

With

With Apples in my Lap, with * Poplar crown'd,
 With Ivy twin'd, and Ribbons neatly bound ;
*Tell, sacred Moon, what first did raise my Flame,
 And whence my Pain, and whence my Passion came ?*
 Where, if admitted, it had been kindly done,
 For I am thought the Beauty of the Town ;
 And tho' perhaps I wish'd for greater Bliss,
 I would have been contented with a Kiss ;
 But if deny'd, or flam'd with dull Delay,
 Streight Fire and Force had come, and broke away.

*Tell, sacred Moon, what first did raise my Flame,
 And whence my Pain, and whence my Passion came ?*
 But now to Venus my first Thanks are due ;
 The next, Samantha, must be paid to you :
 To you, Samantha, you, whose gentle Hand
 From raging Fires secur'd the flaming Brand,
 And sav'd poor half-burnt me ; for Love can raise
 Fires fierce as those that in hot Aëna blaze.

*Tell, sacred Moon, what first did raise my Flame,
 And whence my Pain, and whence my Passion came ?*
 He tender Maids to unknown Madness drives,
 And forces from warm Husbands Arms their Wives.
 Thus he, and heedless I, believ'd too soon ;
 He press'd my Hand in his, and laid me down
 On the soft Bed, when streight lock'd Arm in Arm,
 In strict Embraces both grew gently warm ;
 Our Breath was hot and short, we panting lay,
 We look'd, we murmur'd, and we dy'd away.
 Our Cheeks did glow, and fainting Virtue strove,
 At last it yielded to the Force of Love.
 But what need all this Talk ? bright sacred Moon,
 Both were well pleas'd, and some strange Thing was done ;
 And ever since we lov'd, and liv'd at Ease,
 No sullen Minutes broke our Happiness ;

'Till

* This was the Custom to wait on their Beloved with these Love-Toys, as Apples and Garlands, to perform their Ceremony call'd δυαδνσις. His was to be of Poplar, as bestising a Wrestler, being a Tree sacred to Hercules.

'Till soon this Morning, e'er the Sun could rise,
 And drive his Chariot thro' the yielding Waves,
 To fetch the Rosy Morn from Waves below,
 I heard the fatal News, and knew my Woe.
 My Maid's own Mother, she that lives hard by,
 An honest Woman, and she scorns to lie;
 She came and told me, in your Desphid kind?
 And have you firm Possession of his Mind?
 For I am sure, but whether Maid or Boy,
 I cannot tell, he courts another Joy:
 For he drinks Healths; and when those Healths are past,
 He must be gone, and goes away in Haste.
 Besides, with Garlands all his Rooms are dress'd,
 And he prepares, as for a Marriage-Feast.
 This, as she walk'd last Night, she chanc'd to view;
 And told it me, and oh! I fear 'tis true;
 For he was wont to come twice, thrice a Day,
 He saw me still as he return'd from Play;
 But now, since he was here twelve Nights are past;
 Am I forgotten? Am I left at last?
 Whilst perjur'd he for other Beauty burns,
 My Love, I'm sure, deserv'd more kind Returns:
 But now I'll charm; but if he scorns me still,
 I'll force him down to Hell; by Fate, I will.
 Such pow'rful Drugs a Witch did once impart,
 She taught me such strange Charms, such Force of Art.
 But now farewell, bright Moon, turn lovely Moon,
 To Waves below, and drive thy Chariot down.
 Go, lovely Moon, and wake the sleepy Morn;
 I'll bear my Trouble still, as I have born.
 Farewel, and you attending Stars, that wheel
 Round Night's black Axle-tree; bright Stars, farewell.

IDYLLIUM III.

The GOATHERD.

He repines at the Coyneſs of his Miſtreſs, and ends in Deſpair.

I Go to Phyllis, and on yonder Rock
 My Goats are fed, and Tityrus keeps my Flock.
 Dear Tityrus watch, and ſee the Goats be fed,
 To Morning Paſtures, Evening Waters led ;
 But 'ware the Lybian Ridgling's butting Head. }
 Ah ! lovely Phyllis, why ſo wond'rous coy ?
 Why won't you take me to the promis'd Joy ?
 Why won't you meet me now in yonder Grove ?
 Lean on my Breſt, and kiſs, and call me Love ?
 Doſt hate me, Phyllis ? Does my Noſe, when near,
 Seem hook'd, too long my Beard, and rough my Hair ?
 Am I deform'd ? diſpleaſing to thy Eye ?
 Grown ugly now ? I ſee that I muſt die.
 Ten Apples I have ſent, you ſlew'd the Tree,
 Ten more to Morrow ; all I pluck for thee.
 Could I enjoy whate'er my Wiſh can crave,
 I'd turn that Bee that flies into thy Cave ;
 There ſoftly thro' thy ſhady Garland creep,
 And ſteal a Kiſs when you are faſt aſleep.
 I know what Love is now, a cruel God,
 A Tygreſs bore, and nurſ'd him in a Wood ;
 A cruel God, he ſhoots thro' ev'ry Vein,
 And fires my Bones ; have Pity on my Pain.

Dear black-ey'd Sweet, all Stone, ah ! lovely Face,
 Be kind again, and grant one kind Embrace :
 Do, claſp thy humble Swain, and grant one Kiſs ;
 Ev'n empty Kiſſes have a ſecret Blifs.

I rave, and I shall tear the Crowns I made
 Of fragrant Parsly twin'd, to grace your Head:
 Ah! me, unhappy me, what Pains I bear?
 Ah! me, undone! yet you refuse to hear.
 My Jerkin's off, I'll leap into the Flood
 From yon high Rock, where Olpis often stood
 To snare his Fronts; and tho' I do not drown,
 'Twill please thee, Phyllis, sure, to hear 'twas done.
 All this I knew, when I design'd to prove,
 Whether I should be happy in my Love:
 I press'd the Long-live, but in vain did press;
 It gave no lucky Sound of good Success.
 To Agrio too I made the same Demand;
 A cunning Woman she, I cross'd her Hand:
 She turn'd the Sieve and Sheers, and told me true,
 That I should love, but not be lov'd by you.
 I have a pretty Goat, a lovely white,
 She bears two Kids, yet fills three Pails at Night.
 This tawny Bess hath begg'd, and begg'd in vain;
 But now 'tis her's, since you my Gifts disdain.
 My right Eye itches now; and shall I see
 My Love? I'll sit and p pe by yonder Tree,
 And she may look on me, she may be won,
 She may be kind, she is not perfect Stone.
 When young Hippomachus sought the Maid's Embrace,
 He took the Golden Fruit, and ran the Race:
 But when she view'd, how strong was the Surprise!
 Her Soul took Fire, and sparkled thro' her Eyes.
 How did her Passions, how her Fury move!
 How soon she leap'd into the deepest Love!
 From Aetna's Top, to Pyle Melampus drove
 His tender Flock, and met a noble Love;
 Wife Alphib's Mother open'd all her Charms
 To Bias Eyes, and wanton'd in his Arms.
Adonis liv'd a Swain, and yet the Boy
 Fir'd Venus Breast: She prov'd so mad for Joy,
 That in her Lap she warm'd his dying Head,
 Kiss'd his cold Lips, and would not think him dead.

Tho' young Endymion fed ten thousand Sheep,
I envy nothing, but his lasting Sleep.
I envy Jason's happy Dreams, my Dear;
They tasted Joys which no Prophane must hear;
Joys too divine for an unhallow'd Ear.
Ah! me, my Head! but who regards my Pain?
I'll fall, despair, and never pipe again.
A Prey to Wolves, 'twill be a dainty Feast,
And sweeter far than Honey to thy Taste.

IDYLLIUM IV.

Battus and Carrydon, in a pastoral Way, discourse of several Things.

To his good Friend, Mr. E. LYDE of Hoxsath.

W Hoso Herds? Philando's? Tell whose Herds they
 E. Axon's; for Axon gave them to my Care.

B. Don't you play false, and sometimes milk a Cow
By Stealth? C. No, my old Master eyes me so,
Gives the Calves Suck, and watches what I do.

B. But where is ~~Egon~~? Where's the Heads-man gone?

C. What, ha'n't you heard? for sure the Story's known.

B. Not I, I live out of the Road of Fame.

C. Milo hath drawn him to th' Olympic Game.

B. And what will he do there, rude Arab! Swain?

C. But yet his Strength is fam'd o'er all the Plain;
As big as Hercules, as stout and strong.

B. More known for brutal Force, than fam'd for Song.

C. He ne'er play'd Cudgels, but he broke a Head ;
Stout ~~Capt~~'s Match, I'm sure, my Mother said.

A Score of * Sheep he carry'd, and a Spade.
 B. What will not Milo do, that can persuade
 This Clown to leave his Wealth, and court a Shade?
 C. His Cows here want him, and mourn o'er the Plain.
 B. Poor Beasts! and how unhappy in a Swain!
 C. Poor Beasts! they will not eat, but idly low.
 B. Ah, careless Herds-man! look on yonder Cow;
 Poor Beast, I pity her, how gastly thin!
 Her Bones are creeping thro' the famish'd Skin.
 See, you may tell her Ribs, her Entrails view;
 Does she, like Insects, feed upon the Dew?
 C. No; and I hope to see her shortly prove,
 She sometimes doth in Latym's shady Grove,
 And sometimes o'er Asar's Pastures stray,
 And there I feed her at a Rack of Hay.
 B. Look, that red Bull is lean, mere Skin and Bone;
 May the Lamprida, when they would atone
 Great Juno's Anger, meet with such a one;
 Lean be his aged Flesh, corrupt his Blood,
 'Tis fit for them, a vile unhappy Brood.
 C. And yet I feed him, by the Springs he goes,
 Or in Neatha's Plains, where Plenty flows,
 The Gilcup Cowslip, and the Dazy grows.
 B. Ah, wretched Egon, here thy Oxen die,
 While you, for vain, uncertain Prizes try.
 Thy best new Pipe is spoil'd, 'tis mouldy grown;
 Alas, it must be spoil'd now thou art gone.
 C. No Fear of that; for when he went away,
 He gave it me, and, Battus, I can play:
 I sing smooth Pyrrius Songs, I gain Renown.
 To Crato, Zacynth is a pretty Town;
Lacinius rises proudly to the East,
 There Egon once eat eighty Cakes at least.
 There did I see him, whilst he bravely strove,
 Draw down the Bull, and give him to his Love,
 To Amaryllis; all with Joy were fill'd,
 The Women shouted, and the Herds-man smil'd.

B 3

B. Ah,

* For Diet and Exercise before he was fill'd.

- B. Ah, lovely Amarylus, you alone
Do still possess my Mind, tho' dead and gone ;
Dear as my Goats you dy'd, and left me here ;
Ah me, how hard's my Fate, and how severe !
- C. Cheer up, dear Raisin, better Days may come ;
To Morrow, chance, may bring a milder Doom.
The Living hope, the Dead are hopelest, lost ;
Jove sometimes smiles, and sometimes frowns in Frost.
- B. I do cheer up ; but drive your Heifers down,
They spoil my Olives, Browning, hift, be gone.
- C. Hah, Colly, to the Bank ; not stir ! by Jove,
If I come to ye, in Faith, I'll make ye move.
See now she runs this Way ; a curst Cow !
Had I my Paddle, thou should'st feel me now.
- B. Look here, for God's Sake, oh, it pricks, it pricks ;
I've caught a Thorn, oh me, how deep it sticks !
Pray pull it out, dost see it ? Look 'tis there ;
Pox take the Cow, I'm sure 'twas long of her.
- C. I have it out, 'twas this ; come, all is well.
- B. How small the Wound, yet what vast Courage sell !
- C. Ne'er walk o'er Mountains, Swain, without your Shoe ;
For there are Thorns, and there sharp Prickles grow.
- B. But, Swain, does thy old Master still persue
His old Sweet-heart ? or doth he court a new ?
- C. His old one still, poor Wretch ! In yonder Grove
I trac'd, and found them in a Scene of Love.
- ¶ Oh, brave old lusty Goar ! thy wanton Gust
May vie with Pan's, or with the Satyrs Lust.

IDYLLIUM V.

The Goatherd Comatas, and Herds-man Laco, contend in Singing; they lay a Wager, and chuse Morso Judge. The Victory is determin'd on the Goatherd's Side.

TO OWEN SALISBURY, Esq;

C. FLY, Goats, fly, Laco, fly, and safely feed;
He stole my Skin last Night, dear Goats, take heed.
L. Lambs, don't you fly the Springs; Lambs, don't you fear,

When he that lately stole my Pipe's so near.

C. Thy Pipe! what Pipe had'st thou, thou slavish Lout,
Could'st thou and Corydon do ought but root
On Oaten Straws, to please the foolish Rout? }

L. The Pipe that Lycos gave, free haughty Fool;
But pray what Skin was that that Laco stole?
What Skin, Comatas? where could'st thou have one?
Thy Master wants a Skin to sleep upon.

C. That spotted Skin, which, when he kill'd a Goat,
Dick gave the Nymphs; which you, you envious Sor,
Then griev'd to see; and now, by knavish Theft,
Hast robb'd me of; 'twas all that I had left.

L. By Pan, not Laco, not Calathis Son,
Did steal thy Pipe, or know by whom 'twas done.
If this be'n't true, may I grow frantick, leap
From yonder Rocks, and sink into the Deep.

C. And by the Fountain, Nymphs, (those Nymphs I find
To all my Pray'rs, and all my Wishes kind)

Comatas did not steal thy Pipe; believe
That this is true, and I thy Fault forgive.

L. If I believe thee, may I bear the Pains
That Daphnis bore; but since you boast your Strains,

Come,

Come, stake a Goat, I'll pipe when e'er you will,
Till you grow weary, and confess my Skill.

C. A Sow, Minerva ; I'm content to lay
A Kid, you stake a Lamb; and then let's play.

L. And how's that equal ? Oh, you crafty Fool,
Pray who Goats Hair did ever sheer for Wooll ?

C. He that's as sure as you are to excel;
(Tho' Wasps with Grass-hoppers may strive as well)
But since you think a Kid no equal Stake,
Look there's a full-grown Goat, you shan't draw back.

L. Soft, soft, good Sir, and let us hence remove,
There's better singing in that shady Grove;
For there cold Water flows, there sweet Herbs spring,
And there are grassy Beds, and Locusts sing :

C. I'm not in Haste ; but yet I'm vex'd to see,
That thou should'st dare at last to strive with me ;
With me, who when a Boy did teach thee Strains ;
Are these the kind Returns for all my Pains ?

But breed a Wolf, or an ungrateful Bear,
And he'll devour thee for thy former Care.

L. Pray when did I, you envious railing Sot,
E'er learn, or hear from you, one graceful Note ?
But pray come hither, here are Beds of Grass,
And here we'll sing, 'tis a convenient Place.

C. I'll not go thither, here are Cypress Bowers,
Here labouring Bees buz o'er the rising Flowers;
Here two cold Streams, and here a Fountain flows,
And the Birds talk, and murmur thro' the Boughs.
Thy Shade's not half so good; here Pines do grow,
Rear lousy Heads, and scatter Nuts below.

L. No, rather go with me, and ev'ry Step
Shall tread on Lamb-skin Wooll, more soft than Sleep;
In thine are Goat-skins spread, of gasty Hue,
They smell as rank, nay, almost worse than you.
One Bowl of Milk I to the Nymphs will crown,
And one of Oil, if that will draw thee on.

C. No, go with me, for mine are fairer Powers;
There thou shalt tread upon the sweetest Flowers:

Besides,

Besides, o'er all I'll spread a lovely Skin,
'Tis ten times softer; and as sweet as thine.

Eight Bowls of Milk to Pans I'll freely crown,
Of Honey eight, if that will draw thee on.

L. Come then, I'll go, the Doubt at last is clear'd,
Your Skins, your Shades, shall be for once prefer'd;
But who shall judge, and who shall hear us play?
I wish the Herdsman Liop came this Way.

C. I don't care much for him; but here's as good,
Morsen, the Keeper of our Master's Wood,
He makes your Faggots; and if you'll consent,
We'll call him, he shall be our Judge. L. Content.

C. Then call him. L. Friend, come here, we now contest
Which tunes the rural Pipe, which sings the best;
Whose Art is greatest, must be judg'd by thee;
Judge right, and neither favour him nor me.

C. No, Morsen, let Desert thy Judgment guide,
Be fair to both, and lean to neither Side;
This Flock is Therion Flock, and these, Booscoos,
Eumara's Goats, that you may know us both.

L. Did any ask to whom these Flocks belong,
To me, or Therion? oh, thou hast a Tongue!

C. What else I say, I'm sure is nought but Truth:
I scorn to boast; but you've a railing Mouth.

L. Slugg, sing, but let thy Friend return again Alive, Comatas! Oh, how sweet a Swain!

C. Me more than Daphnis all the Muses love,
Two Kids I lately offer'd in a Grove.

L. And me Apollo loves, a wanton Seer
I feed for Sacrifice, his Feast is near.

C. I milk two Goats; a Maid in yonder Plain
Look'd on, and sigh'd, Dost with thy self, poor Swain?

L. Ha, Loos, halt! full twenty Vass can fill
With Cheese, and hath a lovely Youth at Will.

C. The fair Calistris, as my Goats I drove,
With Apples peels me, and still murmurs Love:

L. And me, smooth Cratid, when he meets me, fires;
I burn, I rage, and am all wild Desires.

C. Who

C. Who with the Rose, whose Flow'r the Bush adorns, Compares the meaner Beauties of the Thorns?

L. And who will Sloes with Damson-Plumbs compare?
For those are black, and these are lovely fair.

C. I'll give my Dear a Dove; in yonder Woods
I'll climb, and take her down, for there she broods.

L. A Fleece to make a Coat, when first I shear
Black Rams, I will present unto my Dear.

C. Goats from the Olives, come and feed below,
By this declining Bank, there Myrtles grow.

L. Ho, Sharp-horn, Browning, leave those hurtful Weeds,
And come and graze this Way, where Colly feeds.

C. I have a Cypress Pail and Cup; 'tis new,
Well wrought, and this, my Love, I keep for you.

L. I have a sturdy Spock, it Wolves will seize;
With this my Boy may hunt what Beasts he please.

C. You Locusts, you that o'er my Fences throng,
Hurt not my Vines too much, for they are young.

L. See, Grass-hoppers, see how I nearly touch
The Goatberd, Reapers you provoke as much.

C. I hate the brush-tail'd Fox; he comes at Night,
Eats Myco's Vines, and then prepares for Flight.

L. I hate the Beetles, for they always prey
On my Philonda's Figs, then whistle away.

C. And don't you mind, when I—you know the Trick,—
You wanton'd, laugh'd, and clung to yonder Stick.

L. Not that; but when your Master us'd to bind,
And lash you there, I know; for that I mind.

C. He's angry, Morfon; art thou, frantick Swain?
Go gather, Scilla, that will purge thy Brain.

L. Morfon, I nettle him, I vex him more;
Swain, thou art mad, go gather Holebore.

C. With Milk Himera, and let Crathis flow
With purple Wine; let Figs on Brambles grow.

L. Let Sybaris ravel Honey; every Urn
My Servant dips, with flowing Combs return.

G. My Goats eat Thyme, on Figs they freely brouze,
They walk on Flags, and lye on tender Boughs.

L. My

L. My Sheep eat Parsly, thro' the Fields they stray;
They crop sweet Flow'rs and Dazies all the Day.

C. I love not Alcipp; (she I hop'd would prove More kind) when I presented her a Dove,
She clasp'd me not, nor kifs'd, nor call'd me Love. }

L. I love Eumedes much; I gave my Pipe;
How sweet a Kiss he gave! Ah! charming Lip.

C. Thou art contentious, Lacon; end thy Strains;
Pyes should not strive with Thrushes, Owls with Swans.

MORSON.

End, Shepherd, end thy Strains, and die for Shame,
For Morson says Comatas wins the Lamb.

Go, offer to the Muse, and send a Piece
To Morson, for he claims it as his Fees.

COMATAS.

I will, by Pan, my Goats all leap for Joy;
And I'll frisk too, I'll leap into the Sky.
I'll toot at Lacon; I have won the Lamb;
Go, foolish Shepherd, pine, and die for Shame.
Frisk, Goats, and leap; in Sybaris purling Spring
I'll wash you all, and all the while I'll sing.
Push not the Kids, you Goat, 'till I have done
The Sacrifice; if you dare push but one,
Thou shalt--How now? Well, thou shalt smart for this;
Or may Comatas, he that won the Prize,
Forget his Pipe, and loose his Flock, be poor,
And basely beg his Bread at Laco's Door.

IDYLLIUM VI.

Damætas and Daphnis, meeting at Noon, sing ; Daphnis applies his Song to Polyphemus, who was in Love with Galatæa, and Damætas in his Person answers.

To THOMAS WYNDHAM of Lincolns-Inn, Esq;

D Ametas, and the Herds-man Daphnis, drove Their Flocks to feed, and took one shady Grove ;
 The one was bearded, of a charming Grace,
 The other young, Down cloath'd his lovely Face.
 They sat and wanton'd by a purling Spring
 In Mid-day Heat, and thus began to sing.
 The lowing Herds lay round, and quench'd their Thirst ;
 First Daphnis sang, for he had challeng'd first.

DAPHNIS.

Fair Galatæa, from the smiling Deep,
 With Apples, Polyphemus pelts thy Sheep ;
 (See from the Shore they all with Haste remove)
 And says a Goatherd's an unskilful Love.
 But you, poor Wretch, ah! Wretch, ne'er view the Maid,
 But sit and pipe, and call to Floods for Aid.
 See there again, see how she pelts thy Spock,
 The faithful Dog that keeps thy wand'ring Flock.
 Hah! how he barks! and, in a wild Amaze,
 Lookso'er the Flood; and whilst by Shores he strays, }
 His Shadow in the quiet Water plays.
 Ah! call him back, lest when the Maid appears,
 He rushes on, and her fair Limbs he tears :
 But there she wantons, she, the charming Fair,
 As Down of Thistles in the Summer Air ;
 And driven still by an unlucky Fate,
 Flies those that love, and follows those that hate.

Her

Of THEOCRITUS.

Her Ways are foolish, and in vain she tries;
But mean Things, Polyphemus, oft surprize,
For Love is Magick, and deceives the Eyes.

DAMETAS.

And next Dametas sang; I chanc'd to look,
By Pan, I did, whilst she did pelt my Flock.
She could not 'scape this Eye, this single one,
By which I see, and will 'till Life is gone.
Tho' Tellamus foretels strange Ills to come;
Oh! let him take, and keep his Ills at Home,
And for his Children, treasure up the Doom.
But freightways I, to raise her Flame the more,
Seem not to see her trace the yielding Shore;
But can pretend another charms my Eyes;
Then how she frets, good God! and how she dies!
Oh! with what eager Haste she leaves the Waves!
My Folds she searches, and looks o'er my Caves.
Besides, my Dog, he is at my Command,
Shall bark at her, and gently bite her Hand;
For whilst she was my Love, the only She,
He fawn'd, and laid his Head upon her Knee.
This, if I practise long, she'll strive to move,
And send a Message to declare her Love:
But I will shut my Door, and scorn to heed,
Unless she swears that she will grant her Bed;
For I'm not ugly, for last Night I stood
And view'd my Figure in a quiet Flood.
Let Men say what they will, my Face is fair,
My Beard is fine, I'm sure, and neat my Hair;
And this one Eye, in my Opinion, rare.
I have a Set of Teeth, a finer White
No Parian Marble boasts, a lovely Sight:
But lest she charm me, I have murmur'd thrice,
Spit thrice; for old Corytto taught me this;
She that of late in rich Hyppocoon's Room,
Sat midst the Reapers, and sang Harvest Home.
Thus sang Dametas, and with eager Joy
Young Daphnis kiss'd, and clasp'd the lovely Boy.

I gave them Gifts that suited with their Youth;
 A Pipe and Flute ; and so I pleas'd them both.
 The jocund Heifers wanton'd o'er the Fields,
 Whilst both unconquer'd stand, and neither yields.

IDYLLIUM VII.

Theocritus was entertain'd by Phrasidamus and Antigones, Licop's Sons, and invited into the Country to a Feast they then kept. As he was going, he meets Lycidas, the Cretan, and each sings of his Love.

To Mr. THOMAS CURGANVEN.

NOW Ceres Feast was come, the Corn was grown,
 When I and dear Eumedes left the Town ;
Amyntas made a third ; we all design'd
 To pay a Visit to a special Friend,
 Rich Licop's Son, for then he kept the Feast,
 And kindly bad me be a welcome Guest.
 Rich Licop's Son, the Glory of the Plains,
 For gen'rous Blood runs thro' his noble Veins ;
 From Chalco down it came, the Brave, the Bold,
 And gather'd still fresh Honours as it roll'd.
 From Chalco down, that he, by whose Command
 The Bourian Spring o'erflows the fruitful Land,
 Around it Dazies grow, and all above
 Tall Poplars spread, and form a shady Grove.
 Scarce had we gone thro' half the neighb'ring Plain,
 By Brasil's Tomb we met a musing Swain :
 His Name was Lycidas, the gay, the young,
 A Cretan born, and fam'd for rural Song.

Soon

Soon as we saw him, he by all was known
To be a Goatherd, for he look'd like one;
For o'er his Shoulders hairy Skins were spread,
They smelt as newly tann'd, or newly head.
A tatter'd Mantle o'er his Breast was cast,
And ty'd with an old Girdle to his Waist.
His right Hand with a knotty Crab was fill'd;
He look'd on me, and as he look'd, he smil'd;
Gay, vig'rous, sweet, and in the Pride of Youth,
And as he spake, a Smile sat on his Mouth.

Where, Smichidas, where now at burning Noon?
What urgent Business makes thee leave the Town,
Whilst bleating Flocks in Shades avoid the Heats,
And ev'ry Lizzard to his Hole retreats?
What Feast invites? or, now I view your Dress,
Who treads his Grapes, and calls you to the Press?
Hark, how at ev'ry Step, you walk so fast,
The Stones resound, and tell you are in Haste.

And I reply'd, Dear Glory of the Plains,
How great, how just a Praise commends thy Strains?
Dear skilful Piper, Fame does loudly tell,
That you the Reapers and the Swains excel;
I'm glad on'r, tho' I think I pipe as well.
We go to Ceres Feast, this Way we bend,
And make a Visit to a special Friend;
He keeps it now, for she hath throng'd his Floor,
And pays the early Tributes of his Store.
But since we walk one Way, since Time persuades,
And we are far remov'd from gloomy Shades,
Let's pipe and wanton as we walk along,
For we may please each other with a Song;
For I can sing, and by our flatt'ring Youth
I'm prais'd, and call'd the charming Muse's Mouth:
They say I pipe the best, and would deceive
By Praise, but I'm not easy to believe.
My Songs are mean, my Pipe claims no Repute,
Compar'd to Sceli's or Phileta's Flute.
They me, and thus convince the flatt'ring Vague,
As Locusts Tunes excel the croaking Frog.

Thus I design'dly ; then he smil'd, and said,
 What Glories, Smichidas, adorn thy Head ?
 Here, take this Club, this Token of my Love ;
 'Tis justly thine, thou Care of mighty Jove.
 I hate the Mæon that, to boast his Skill,
 Would raise a House to equal yonder Hill ;
 And those that rival the Sicilian Swain,
 I hate as much, and think their Hopes as vain.
 But come, let's sing the Song I lately made ;
 My Goats fed round, and wanton'd as I play'd.
 See if you like it ; it hath pleas'd the Swains,
 And sounds the best and newest of the Plains.

Kind breathing Gales to Mitylenian Shores
 Shall waft my Agis, Nymphs shall guide his Oars ;
 Tho' rainy South Winds raise the angry Tides,
 And rough Orion o'er the Storm presides ;
 Oh ! would he ease my Pains, give just Returns,
 And Love for Love, for him the Goatherd burns.
 Let Halcyons smooth the Seas, the Storms allay,
 And skim the Floods before him all the Way :
 The Nymphs lov'd Bird, of all that haunt the Flood,
 Skim o'er the Waves, and dive for swimming Food.
 Let my dear Agis cut the angry Tide,
 And reach his Port, and there securely ride ;
 For then with Violets, or with Roses, crown'd,
 I'll sport a Glass, and see his Health go round ;
 I'll toast my Beans, to raise pall'd Appetite,
 Make me drink on, and lengthen the Delight.
 Whilst stretch'd on Beds, I'll spend my easy Hours,
 And roul'till I have lost my self in Flowers :
 Then to his Health I'll sport a lusty Bowl,
 And pour dear Agis Love into my Soul.
 Two Swains shall pipe, the best of all the Youth,
 And skilful Richard's Voice shall join with both ;
 How Herds-man Daphnis did for Xenea burn,
 How trac'd the Woods, complaining of her Scorn ;
 How Groves and Echoes to his Groans reply'd,
 And smooth Himera murmur'd when he dy'd ;

For he, as Snow, when Summer heats the Grove
Of Aëna, melted by the Flame of Love.

And how when Force weak Innocence oppress,
The Swain was shut alive into a Chest ;
And how the lab'ring Bees in ev'ry Plain
Forsook their Flow'rs, and buz'd about the Swain,
Because the Muse had fill'd his charming Mouth
With Nectar, and preserv'd the pious Youth.
Happy Comatas, happy thou, the blest
And wond'rous Darling at the Muses Feast ;
Full twelve Months nourish'd by the lab'ring Bee ;
Oh ! had I then been born, and liv'd with thee ;
Then had I fed thy Flock, and heard thy Pipe,
Paid with a Tune, and hung upon thy Lip,
Whilst by a shady Tree, or purling Spring,
Divine Comatas, thou shouldst sit and sing.
Thus he, then I, dear Swain, whilst o'er the Hill
I drove the Herds, the Muse improv'd my Skill ;
Sweet Tunes she taught, which Fame has rais'd above,
And bore on high, to please the Ears of Jove :
But this is choicest, which I'll now produce
To pleasure thee, thou Darling of the Muse.
Love sneez'd on Smichid, for he Myrto loves
As much as Goats the Spring, or Swains the Groves,
Aratus too, his dearest Friend and Joy,
His dear Aratus deeply loves the Boy ;
And this sweet Acis knows, the gay, the young ;
Acis, a Theme for great Apollo's Song.
He knows how dear Aratus loves, he knows
How great his Flame, and how his Passion grows.
Pan, green Homala's Guardian, move the coy,
The soft Philinus, and inflame the Boy ;
Grown wanton, gay, and lavish of his Charms,
Uncall'd for, let him fly into his Arms.
Ye smiling Loves, fair Venus soft Delight,
Like ruddy Apples, pleasing to the Sight,
Leave Bybli's Fountain, leave her purling Streams,
That scorch the Fields with her forbidden Flames,

And shoot Philinus, wound his stubborn Mind;
 Shoot, for he shews no Pity to his Friend;
 Tho' soft as Parsly, tender as the Vine,
 And oh! that he would clasp his Arms in mine.
 Mean while the Women cry, and shake their Heads,
 Ah! ah! Philinus, ah! thy Beauty fades:
 But dear Aratus let's endure no more,
 Forget our Love, and fly the hated Door;
 And when the Cock calls forth the Morning Beams,
 Let broken Slumbers, mix'd with frightful Dreams,
 Disturb his Thoughts, and, by the neighb'ring Gate,
 Ah! let him hang, and none bewail his Fate:
 Let us mind Rest, and let's provide a Charm
 To keep us safe, and free from future Harm.

These Songs we sung, and with a cheerful Smile
 His Crook he gave me, to reward my Skill;
 Take it, he said, 'tis mean, yet don't refuse,
 It is a Pledge of Friendship from the Muse.
 This said, we parted; for in vain we prest,
 We could not force him to the promis'd Feast.
 There Iscop's Son, and all his Friends around,
 With sweet Amyntas fate with Roses crown'd.
 We lay, we wanton'd on a flow'ry Bed,
 Where fragrant Massick, and where Vines were spread,
 And round us Pepars rais'd their shady Head.
 Just by a Spring with pleasing Murmurs flow'd,
 In ev'ry Bush and Thicket of the Wood
 Sweet Insects sang, and sighing Turtles coo'd.
 The lab'ring Bees buzz'd round the purling Spring,
 Their Honey gather'd, and forgot their Sting.
 Sweet Summer's choicest Fruits, and Autumn's Pride,
 Pears by our Head, and Apples by our Side,
 Lay round in Heaps, and loaden Plumbs did stand
 With bending Boughs, to meet the reaching Hand.
 To please us more, he pierc'd a Cask of Wine,
 'Twas four Years old, and from a noble Vine.
Castalian Nymphs, ye Nymphs that still reside
 On steep Parnassus, and command his Pride,

Did e'er old Chiron, did he e'er produce
For great Alcides, such rich Bowls of Juice?
Did Polyphem, the vast Sicilian Swain,
That darted Mountains o'er the frighted Main,
Drink Wine like this? Did e'er such Bowls advance
His Love-sick Thoughts, and raise him to a Dance?
As then you gladly mix'd to ev'ry Guest,
And pour'd on Cere's Altars at her Feast?
Oh, may she often fill the fruitful Plain,
And may I tread the Reeks, and fix the Fan;
Whilst joyful she with Smiles just Thanks receives,
And holds in either Hand full bending Sheaves.

IDYLLIUM VIII.

Daphnis and Menalcas sing for a Wager; a Goatherd is chosen Judge, who determines Daphnis's Song to be the best.

TO RICHARD HICKES, of the Middle Temple,
Esq;

THE Herds-man Daphnis walking o'er the Plain,
The gay Menalcas met, a Shepherd Swain;
Both yellow Locks adorn'd, and both were young;
Both rarely pip'd, and both divinely sung;
Then first Menalcas rais'd his lovely Head,
And spake, and smil'd on Daphnis as he said.
M. Come, Herds-man Daphnis, will you pipe with me?
I vow, I'm sure that I can conquer thee;
I'm sure I can excel thee as I will.
D. And Daphnis thus reply'd, You boast your Skill,
Menalcas, but I'm sure you can't excel;
For pipe until you burst, I pipe as well.

M. And

M. And shall we try? D. Yes, Swain, I know my Skill.

M. And will you lay a Wager? D. Yes, I will.

M. What will you lay, what equal to our Fame?

D. I'll stake a Calf, you stake a full-grown Lamb.

M. I cannot stake a Lamb; for should I lose,

My Father's jealous, and my Mother cross;

These watch, they know how many Lambs I keep;

Both count my Lambs at Night, and one my Sheep.

D. What then? and what shall he that conquers, gain?

M. I have a Pipe, 'tis new, of sounding Cane,

Wax'd at both Ends; and tho' I'll stake no Prize

That is my Father's, yet I'll venture this.

D. And I have one, white Wax both Ends secures,

It sounds as well, and is as new as yours;

For when I made it, as I cleft the Reeds,

One prick'd me, look e'en now my Finger bleeds.

But since we venture, since such Pipes we lay,

What Man shall judge, and who shall hear us play?

M. We'll call that Goatherd, look, the Swain is near,

Our Dog barks at him, he, perhaps, will hear.

The Shepherds call'd, the Goatherd streight obey'd,

The Goatherd judg'd, and thus the Shepherds play'd.

Menalcas first, then Daphnis tun'd his Cane,

By Turns they sang, Menalcas first began.

M. Ye Vales, ye Springs that flow from distant Seas.

If e'er the sweet Menalcas Songs did please,

Then feed my Lambs; if Daphnis drives his Kine

To graze them here, feed his as well as mine.

D. Ye Herbs and Flowers, ye Glory of the Vales,

If Daphnis Songs are sweet as Nightingales,

Then feed my Herds; if thro' the flow'ry Mead

Menalcas drives, then let his Lambs be fed.

M. There Pastures flourish, there the Dugs do fill,

The Lambs are suckled, and the Shepherds smile,

Where my Boy comes; but when he leaves the Place,

The Shepherd withers o'er the fading Grass.

D. There Sheep, there Goats bear Twins, there lab'ring

Bees

Do fill their Hives, and there rise prouder Trees,

Where

Where Milo treads; but when he leaves the Place,
The Herdsmen withers, and the Herd decays.

M. O! Goat, the white Kid's Husband, stately Oaks;
O! flat-nos'd Kids, make haste to purling Brooks!

For there he is, go, let the Boy be show'd,
That Proteus fed his Sea-Calves, tho' a God.

D. Not Pelop's Land, not Heaps of Gold refin'd
I wish, nor Swiftneſs to outſtrip the Wind;

But let me ſit and ſing by yonder Rock,
Clasp thee, my Dear, and view my feeding Flock.

M. Rough Storms to Trees, to Birds th' treacherous Snare,
Are frightful Evils, Springs to the Hare,
Soft Virgins Love to Man; oh! mighty Jove,
Not I alone, but thou haſt ſtoop'd to Love!

Thus ſang the Youths by Turns, and pleas'd the Swain,
And thus Menalcas the laſt Part began.

M. Wolf, ſpare my Lambs, and let them ſafely bleat,
For I am little, and my Fold is great.

How, White-foot, how ſo ſoon, ſo faſt aſleep?
Is this your Care, do you thus watch my Sheep?

I Faith, you ſhall not ſleep, when one ſo young
As I am, Shepherd, and engag'd in Song;

But feed, dear Flock, and crop the flow'ry Plain.

Feed, never fear, the Graſs will grow again;

Fill well your Dugs, that when Night ſpreads her Veil,
The Lambs may ſuck, and I may fill my Pail.

And next fair Daphnis ſang —

D. And as I drove my Herd, a lovely Maid
Stood peeping from a Cave; ſhe ſmil'd, and ſaid,

Daphnis is lovely, ah! a lovely Youth;

What Smiles, what Graces ſit upon his Mouth!

I made no ſharp Returns, but hung my Head,
And went my Way, yet pleas'd with what ſhe ſaid.

Winds ſweetly murmur, the Steer ſweetly lows,

Sweet is the Heifer's Voice, and ſweet the Cow's.

'Tis ſweet to lye in Shades, by purling Streams,

In Summer's Heat, diſſolv'd in eaſy Dreams.

Acorns the Oaks, and Graſs commends the Plain;

Fat Calves do grace the Cows, and Cows the Swain.

Thus

Thus sang the Youths, and thus the Goatherd said,

GOATHERD.

Sweet is thy Voice, and sweet the Tunes you play'd.
 Fair Daphnis, thro' my Ears thy Songs have past,
 Sweet to the Mind, as Honey to the Taste ;
 And if you'll teach me, if instruct the Swain,
 That Goat is thine, it shall reward thy Pain.
 See how her Udder swells, it ne'er will fail,
 And ev'ry Night it fills my largest Pail.
 The Boy rejoyc'd, he leap'd with youthful Heat,
 As sucking Colts leap when they swig the Teat :
 The other griev'd, he hung his bashful Head,
 As marry'd Virgins when first laid in Bed.

Thus Daphnis liv'd the Glory of the Plains,
 Was thought the best, and lov'd by all the Swains ;
 And to compleat the Happiness of Life,
 The lovely Nais blest'd him in a Wife.

IDYLLIUM IX.

A Shepherd invites Daphnis and Menalcas to sing ; they please him, and he rewards them both.

To my Chum THOMAS LYDGOULD, M. A. of Wadham-College.

Sing, Daphnis, sing, begin the rural Lay ;
 Begin, sweet Daphnis ; next, Menalcas, play ;
 Mix Calves and Heifers, join the Bulls and Cows,
 And let them feed, and wanton in the Boughs ;
 Whilst you begin, begin the rural Strain,
 And next Menalcas sing, and cheer the Swain.
D. Sweet is the Heifer's Sound, and sweet the Kine,
 Sweet is the Pipe's, the Swain's, and sweet is mine.

By

By purling Streams I have a shady Bed,
 And o'er white Heifers Skins are neatly spread ;
 Ah, careless Herd ! they from a Mountain's side,
 Ah, cruel Storm ! were blown, they fell, they dy'd.
 And there I value Summer's burning Heats
 No more than Lovers do their Father's Threats ;
 Their Mother's kind Complaints, or Friend's Advice.
 This Daphnis sang, and next Menalcas this.

M. Me Ætna bred, to me she kindly gave,
 'Midst hollow Rocks, a large and shady Cave ;
 I live by pleasant Brooks, and purling Streams,
 And have as much as e'er you saw in Dreams.
 By me a thousand Goats, and Flocks are fed,
 And Wooll lies round my Feet, and round my Head :
 Soft Chitterlings afford me pleasing Food,
 And when the Winter comes, I'm stor'd with Wood ;
 So that I value Cold no more, not I,
 Than toothless Men do Nuts, when Pulse is by.

I Clapt them both, to both Rewards I threw,
 A Club that in my Father's Meadow grew,
 To Daphnis, rude as from the Woods it fell,
 And yet scarce Art could shape a Thing so well.
 Then next Menalcas did a Shell receive,
 The Flesh divided, was enough for five,
 Caught in th' Icarian Flood ; he took the Shell,
 And smil'd as pleas'd, and lik'd the Present well.
 Hail, rural Muses, hail, produce the Strains
 Which once I sang, and pleas'd the list'ning Swains ;
 I'll boldly sing, nor 'midst my wond'rous Song,
 Shall Blisters rise, and gall my boasting Tongue.
 The Hawks to Hawks are Friends, to Ewes the Ewes,
 To Larks the Larks are Friends, to me the Muse ;
 Oh ! may I hear them still ! the Weary sleep,
 The Spring the Plough-man, shady Plains the Sheep,
 Smooth Streams, and rising Flow'rs the labouring Bee,
 Delight not half so much, as Muses me ;
 On whom they look and smile, secure they prove Fam'd Circe's Cup, nor fear the Force of Love.

IDYLLIUM X.

Battus not Reaping as fast as he was wont, Milo asks him the Reason; Battus confesseth it was Love, and sings a Song in Praise of his Sweet-heart.

To my Chum Mr. HODY, of Wadham-College.

MILO.

A H! labouring Reaper, Wretch! what ails thee now?
Thou can'st not reap as thou wer't wont to do;
Nor yet so fast; look, he hath rais'd a Cock;
Youlag, as Sheep when prick'd behind the Flock.

What wilt thou do, poor Wretch, before 'tis Noon?

What wilt thou do e'er shady Night comes on,
Since, e'er one Land is cut, you fail so soon?

E. Ah, Milo! thou can'st hold out all the Day,
But I'm grown weak, ah, Piece of flinty Clay!
Didst thou ne'er wish for One that was away?

M. Not I, for what have I that work for Food,
To do with Love? He is an idle God.

Forget thy lazy Thoughts, soft Cares remove.

B. Then, Milo, did you never wake for Love?

M. And may it never, never break my Sleep,
For Dogs, once blooded, always run at Sheep.

B. But I have lov'd these ten long Days, or more.

M. A wealthy Man, enjoy thy fancy'd Store,
I am, and am contented to be poor.

B. Hence 'tis that I'm o'er-run with lazy Ease,
My Fields neglected, and my Ploughs displease.

M. But

M But who thus wounds thee? B. Moll, the brisk, the gay,
She sung our Song, and was our Queen of May.

M. Faith, rightly serv'd, pursue thy vain Delight,
How that old Fly shall clasp thee all the Night!

B. You flout; not only Pluto's Eyes are lost,
But vexing Love's; forbear, rude Swain, to boast.

M. I do not boast, but lay thy Handful down,
Throw by thy Hook, unbend thy gather'd Frown,
And sing (for you could sing) thy slender Fair,

'Twill ease thy Labour, and divert thy Care.

BATTUS.

With me, sweet Muse, the slender Maid rehearse;
For all looks fair that you adorn with Verse.

Bombyce charming, Sun-burnt, gaily thin
You seem to many Eyes, but brown to mine.

The letter'd Daffadil, and Violet's brown;
Yet those are chiefest Graces of a Crown.

The Goats their Thyme, the Wolves the Goats pursue,
The Crane the Plough, and I am mad for you.

Oh, had I Cæsus Store, then both should shine,
Two golden Statues fix'd in Venus Shrine!

Thy Hand should grace an Apple, Harp, or Rose,
And me a dancing Garb, and gawdy Shoes.

Bombyce charming; oh, would'st thou be kind!

How sweet thy Voice! but who can tell thy Mind?

MILLO.

Hah! we ne'er knew the Value of the Swain,
How well he measures, how he tunes his Strain!

Hah! no more Sense, and yet thy Beard so long!
But stay, and hear the sweet Lycerfa's Song.

O, fruitful Ceres, bless this thriving Crop,
Increase, and make it larger than our Hope!

Ye Reapers, bind the Sheaves, lest some should say,
Ah, lazy Drones, they don't deserve their Pay;

Or to the North your Cocks, ye Reapers, rear;
Or to the South, those Winds increase the Ear.

Ye Clowns that winnow, never sleep at Noon;
For then the Chaff is loose, and quickly gone.

Reaper

Reapers should rise with Larks, and sleep when they
 To Roost retire, but bear the Heat all Day.
 Frogs Lives, my Boys, are blest'd ; for 'midst their Pool
 They never want, their Cup is always full.
 Boil, Steward, boil them whole, such Pinching's mean,
 You'll cut your Hand whilst you divide a Bean.

Such Songs should Reapers sing, that toil and sweat,
 That work at Noon, and bear the burning Heat ;
 But starving Love should never vex thy Head,
 Such Tales will bring thee to a Bit of Bread,
 Tales for thy Mother, as she lies a Bed. }

IDYLLIUM XI.

He writes to a Physician, and tells him, that the Muses are the only Remedy for Love, which he proves by the Example of Polyphemus.

To Dr. PITT of Wadham-College.

IN vain, Learn'd Sir, in vain is all your Art,
 There is no Physick for a wounded Heart ;
 No Herb can ease, no Salve the Pain remove,
 There is no Cure for the Disease of Love,
 Beside the Muses ; those are soft, and sweet,
 And pleasing Medicines, but are hard to get.
 This, Sir, you know, whose Skill is next divine
 In Physick ; you, the Darling of the Nine.
 Thus Polyphem found Ease, the Gay, the Young,
 He cur'd his raging Passion by a Song ;
 No mean Degree of Love his Breast did fire,
 He was all Fury, Rage, and wild Desire ;
 This single Passion did his Mind controul,
 And was the only Business of his Soul :

Oft did his Sheep, his former chief Delight,
 From Pastures fed, return alone at Night;
 Whilst on the fedy Shore the Cyclops lay,
 And singing Galatea pin'd away,
 From Morn 'till Night; for Venus powerful Dart
 Had gall'd his Liver, and had pierc'd his Heart,
 And yet he found a Cure; on Rocks he stood,
 And thus he sang, as he survey'd the Flood.

Fair Maid, and why dost thou thy Love despise?
 More white than Curds, and pleasing to my Eyes;
 More soft than Lambs, more wanton than a Steer;
 But to the Sense, like Grapes unripe, severe.
 You come, when pleasing Sleep hath seal'd my Eye;
 When pleasing Sleep unseals, you quickly fly:
 You fly with eager Haste, as fearful Lambs
 From rav'ning Wolves run bleating to their Dams.
 I lov'd thee, Nymph, I lov'd e'er since you came
 To pluck our Flow'rs; from thence I dare my Flame.
 My Eye did then my feeble Heart betray,
 I know the Minute of the fatal Day
 My Mother led you, and I shew'd the Way;
 Then when I look'd, and ever since I burn,
 I must love on, despairing a Return.
 The Cause of all thy Hate, dear Nymph, I know,
 One large wide Gap spreads cross my hairy Brow
 From Ear to Ear, one Eye doth singly grace,
 My Nose is flat, and even to my Face.

Yet I, that ugly I, whom you refuse,
 Feed thousand Goats, and milk ten thousand Ewes;
 These give me Drink and Cheeses all the Year;
 See round my Cave my loaden Shelves appear,
 And bend beneath the weighry Heaps they bear.
 Besides, I live the Joy of all the Plain,
 No Cyclops can pretend so sweet a Strain:
 Thee, thee, dear Nymph, with thee my self I sing,
 'Till Midnight's past, and Morning spreads her Wing.
 Ten Cubs, I forc'd them from an angry Bear,
 Ten Does I keep, and all to please my Dear.

Come, live with me, and I sincerely vow
 That your Condition shan't be worse than now.
 Forake the Ocean, leave the angry Sea,
 'Tis better sleeping in my Cave with me ;
 There Lawrels grow, and there black Ivy twines,
 And blushing Clusters load the bended Vines :
 There are cold Streams, which from the melting Snow
 Hot Æna sends, a Drink divine, below :
 These all Things are by Nature form'd to please,
 And who to this would e'er prefer the Seas ?

But grant that I'm deform'd, unseemly, rough,
 Yet I am rich, and I have Wood enough ;
 A constant blazing Flame still heats my Cave,
 * Tho' by this Eye, the dearest Thing I have,
 I want no outward Heat, the fierce Desire
 That burns my Breast, is a sufficient Fire.

Ah me ! unhappy me ! how Fate prevails !
 Oh me ! had I been born with Fins and Scales,
 That I might dive to you, cut thro' the Deep,
 And kiss your Hand, if you refuse your Lip ;
 Then would I Lillies white, and Roses bring,
 And all the gawdy Glories of the Spring,
 With Poppies blushing Leaves, tho' these do grow
 In Summers Heat, and those in Frost and Snow.

Well, well, I'll learn to swim, next nimble Oars
 That set a Sea-man on our fruitful Shores,
 Shall teach me how to dive, that I may know
 What Pleasure 'tis you take in Waves below.
 Come forth, fair Nymph, come forth, and leave the Main,
 And (as I now) ne'er mind thy Home again ;
 But feed the Flocks with me, or milk the Sheep,
 Or run the Cheese, and never mind the Deep.
 My Mother's cross, her just Complaints pursue,
 For she ne'er spoke in my Behalf to you,
 Altho' she knew my Grief, saw ev'ry Day
 How much I wasted, how I pin'd away.

III

---

* I follow Heinſius.

I'll tell, to fright her, that my Head, my Thigh,
Are pain'd; that she might grieve as well as I.

O! Cyclops, Cyclops, are thy Senses flown!
Is all thy former Wit and Virtue gone?
Go, wreath thy Baskets, cut the tender Boughs:
To feed the Lambs, and milk the burden'd Cows:
Go mind thy Harvest-work, for that will prove,
Thy Wisdom greater, than this whining Love.
Take those that offer, and the Proud despise,
The willing love, and scorn the Maid that flies.
Come, leave this Fooling, leave this dull Despair,
Another Virgin thou shalt find as fair;
For many Maids invite me still to play,
And titter all, as pleas'd, when I obey.
Sure I am somewhat, they my Worth can see,
And I my self will now grow proud of me.

Thus Polyphemus cur'd his strong Disease,
His Songs tam'd Love, and gave more certain Ease,
Than if he had implor'd the Doctor's Skill,
And with just Fees bought your smirring Bill.

IDYLLIUM XII.

A Welcome to a Friend.

To Mr. EDWARD EATON.

YOU come, dear Youth, now three long Days are gone,
You come; but Lovers do grow old in one.
As much as Spring excels the Frost and Snow,
As much as Plumbs are sweeter than a Sloe,
As much as Eves are thicker fleec'd than Lambs,
As much as Maids excel thrice marry'd Dames,

As much as Colts are nimbler than a Steer,
 As much as Thrushes please the list'ning Ear;
 More than the meaner Songsters of the Air;
 So much thy Presence cheers; behold, I run
 As Trav'lers to the Shade at burning Noon:
 Oh! may an equal Flame our Hearts engage,
 And let us live in Songs thro' future Age!

Two Youths were once with mutual Hands confin'd,
 The one was generous, and the other kind:
 Their Love was equal; those were golden Men,
 When he that was belov'd, did love again:
 Grant, ye immortal Pow'rs, grant, mighty Jove,
 Grant this once more, increase these Hands of Love.
 When future Ages shall in Order flow,
 Let some descend, and tell my Shade below,
 Thy Love, thy Lover's Kindness, Faith, and Truth,
 Are prais'd by all, but chiefly by the Youth:
 But this I leave to Heaven's indulgent Care;
 For Heav'n can grant, or can reject my Prayer;
 Yet thee I'll sing; thee sweet, nor 'midst my Song
 Shall tell-tale Blisters rise, and gall my Tongue:
 The little Pains you rais'd, were kindly meant,
 Your healing Love did all the Smart prevent,
 And I departed fraught with good Content.

Brave Megarensians, fam'd for nimble Oars,
 May Peace flow in, and Plenty crown your Shores;
 No less the celebrated Honours claim,
 Which you bestow on Diocles's Name,
 For Love and Friendship long renown'd in Fame.
 At his known Tomb, each Year the Boys contend
 Which kisses softest, which best loves his Friend;
 And he that kisses sweetest, wins the Praise,
 And runs to his glad Mother crown'd with Bays.
 Happy the Man that must bestow the Prize!
 Thrice happy he that judges of the Kiss!
 Fair Ganymed, that makes the Thund'rer low,
 Whose Smiles can calm, and smooth his angry Brow,
 Allay his Fury, and his Rage command,
 And stop his Lightning in his lifted Hand;

Had such a Lip, (or Fame hath often ly'd,
And Fame errs seldom on the better Side)
That like a Touch-stone try'd the proffer'd Joy,
And could discern true Gold from base Alloy.

IDYLLIUM XIII.

He writes to his Friend, a Physician, and tells him that Love conquers the greatest Heroes; which he proves from the Story of Hercules and Hylas.

To Mr. WILLIAM GOULD, M. B. of Wadham-
College.

L Ove, Love, dear Friend, what e'er we think, 'tis true,
Was not design'd for only such as you ;
Nor do the Charms of Beauty strike alone
Us Mortals, seen to Day, to Morrow gone ;
But Hercules, that Son of mighty Jove,
That bore the Lyon's Fury, stoop'd to Love ;
Tho' rough his Mind appear'd, tho' steel'd to Joy,
He Hylas clasp'd, and lov'd the charming Boy.
He taught him as a Father would a Son,
And still to virtuous Actions led him on :
They never parted, nor at Noon, nor Night,
Nor when the Morn's white Horse draws forth the Light,
Nor when the callow Birds lye down to Rest,
And careful old Ones flutter o'er the Nest ;
That still instructing as he once began,
He might be form'd into a worthy Man.
But when stout Jason, with the Youths of Greece,
To Colchos sail'd, their Prize the Golden Fleece :
When he had gather'd all the Sons of Fame
That could assist, the great Alcides came

To

To fair Jolcos, Argo's chiefest Freight ;
 Young Hylas too, the Ship scarce felt his Weight :
 She, swift as Eagles, ply'd her nimble Oars,
 And safely 'scap'd the rough Cyanean Shores,
 Which us'd to meet, and stave the Ships that pass'd ;
 But now are fix'd, on firm Foundations plac'd.
 When Summer came, and when the tender Lambs
 Began to feed on Grass, and leave their Dams,
 The noble Heroes, bless'd with Southern Gales,
 Thro' Hellepont did spread their swelling Sails ;
 Thro' the Propontis they did swiftly row,
 Where stout Cyanean Oxen wear the Plough ;
 And landing there, as shady Night came on,
 And call'd to eat, they sat in Order down ;
 Soft Turfs were rais'd, and each possess'd his Place ;
 The Plain was large, and gave them Beds of Grass.
 The charming Hylas, quick as the Command,
 A brazen Vessel grac'd his lovely Hand,
 Ran o'er the Field to see what Springs afford,
 And fetch some Fountain Water for his Lord ;
 His Lord, and Telamon, his constant Guest,
 One Table always join'd them at the Feast.
 Just by, a murmur'ing Spring crept o'er the Ground,
 The Banks with Pervine, and with Parsly crown'd ;
 Within, the Nymphs, the Ladies of the Plains,
 The watchful Nymphs, that dance and fright the Swains :
Eunica, Malis, and their chiefest Grace
Nicæa, Spring still opens in her Face.
 This Hylas saw, his Cup let gently down,
 Well pleas'd that he could serve his Lord so soon,
 But straight the Nymphs (for Love had divid'd below,
 Their tender Hearts did 'midst the Water glow,
 The Boys fair Eyes had darted warm Desire,
 And thro' the Waves had rais'd a fatal Fire)
 Seiz'd on his Hand, he fell, as forc'd from Clouds
 A falling Star shoots down to under Floods.
 Mean while the Boat-Swain cries, Mates spread the Sails,
 The Wind's at Stern, and we have prosp'rous Gales.

The

The Nymphs danc'd Hylas, Kisses dry'd his Tears,
And Comforts were apply'd to ease his Fears.
But vex'd Alcides, Care with Anger strove,
And tore his Breast, resolv'd to find his Love ;
His left Hand grac'd a Bow of fatal Yew,
Death wing'd and pointed ev'ry Dart that flew ;
His right a knottry Club did well command,
That constant Grace and Terror of his Hand.
Thrice did he Hylas call, and thrice he mourn'd,
Thrice Hylas heard the Voice, and thrice return'd ;
But small the Sound, which thro' the Waves did rise,
Tho' near, he distant seem'd, so weak the Cries.
As shaggy Lyons, fierce by Hunger grown,
That hear a Kid or Lambkin bleat alone,
Start from their Den, and lash their angry Breast,
And fiercely run to take their easy Feast ;
So he thro' thorny Paths did wildly rove,
As mad and furious for his perish'd Love.
Mean while, the Ship was rigg'd, the Winds were fair,
And Sails were spread, but no Alcides near ;
He far remov'd, did rove thro' Paths untrod,
For Love had gall'd his Breast, a cruel God.
Hence Hylas grew a God, and grac'd a Shrine,
His Love and Beauty made him half divine.
Mean while, the Hero's, fir'd with martial Rage,
Alcides blam'd, as fearful to engage ;
It argu'd not his Love, but prov'd his Fear,
To leave the Ship, and so decline the War ;
But he on Foot to barbarous Phasis came,
And noble Actions soon redeem'd his Fame.

IDYLLIUM XIV.

Eschines being scorn'd by Cunisca, who had a greater Kindness for one Woolf, resolves to turn Soldier. His Friend Thynicus advises him to serve King Ptolomy.

To his Friend and Tutor, Mr. BALCH of Wadham-College.

E. Good Morrow, Thynicus. T. The like to you.
E. But why so late? T. So late? What ails thee now?

E. All is not well. T. I see't, you look so thin,
Your Face not wash'd, your Beard spread o'er your Chin,
Your Eye-brows thick. Last Night I chanc'd to view
A poor Bybagwiss; he look'd like you,
Pale, bare-foot, an Athenian, as he said;
But, Faith, he look'd as if on Meal he fed.

E. You joke; but fair Cunisca scorns my Love,
And as her Hatred, so my Flames improve;
And tho', perhaps, I no such Heats betray'd,
Yet I'm within an Inch of flaring mad.

T. You still were passionate, you still pursue
What your perverse Desire hath once in View;
But prithee tell me what disturbs anew?

E. Tom, Will, and Dick, and I, a jovial Crew,
Not minding Fate that did too close pursue,
Drank at my House, the Glass went briskly round,
Our Hearts were merry, and each Head was crown'd.
I made them welcome, got the best I cou'd,
A sucking Pig, two Chickens, Country Food;
And, tho' I say't my self, my Wine was good:
'Twas four Years old, yet mild, I vow 'tis true,
With Burrage mix'd, it drank as well as new.

At

At last we voted each should crown a Glass
 What Health he pleas'd, but name whose Health it was:
 We drank and halloo'd, she mute all the while,
 And sullen sat, without one Word or Smile;
 How was I vex'd to find a Change so soon?
*What Mute? what, have you seen a * Woolf,* says one?
 At that, she blush'd, her guilty Colour rose,
 That you might light a Candle at her Nose.
There's Woolf, there's Woolf, my Neighbour Labbe's Son,
 Tall, slender, and the Beauty of the Town;
 For him she burns, and sighs, and sighs again,
 And this I heard; but loth to find my Pain,
 I let it lye, and grew a Nun in vain. }
 When we were heated well, and flush'd with Wine,
 One sang a Song of Woolf, a cur'd Design;
 For straight Canista wept at the Surprise,
 And soon betray'd her Passion at her Eyes;
 She wept as wanton Girls that leave their Paps,
 And would be dandled on their Mother's Lap;
 Then I, you know me, vex'd at this Disdain,
 Fled at her, struck, and swore, and kick'd again.
 She rose; Oh, Mischief! can I please no more?
Have you another Sweet-heart? One you Whore;
Must you do this now to confirm my Fears?
Go to him, say, and court him with your Tears;
 As swift as Swallows sweeping o'er the Plain
 To catch their Young a Fly, with nimble Pain,
 Catch one, then feed; and straight return again; }
 So quick she left her Seat, so swift her Haste,
 So soon she thro' the Hall and Parlour past,
 I scarce could see her move, she went so fast. }
 Now twenty Days, and ten, and nine, and eight,
 And one, and two are past, two Months compleat;
 Yet still we differ; nor in all this Space
 Have I shav'd once, regardless of my Face.
 But she is Woolf's, and Woolf's her chief Delight;
 For him she will unlock the Gate at Night:

But

---

* Alluding to the common Saying.

But I am scorn'd, I can't be look'd upon,
 She'll scarce vouchsafe the Favour of a Frown;
 And yet, dear Friend, could I but break the Chain;
 And hate her once, all would be well again;
 But as the Proverb says, The heedless Mouse
 Hath bitten Pitch, and how shall he get loose?
 What Physick can these vexing Pains remove!
 I know no Cure for the Disease of Love.

Yet Dick, my Friend, that equal Pains endur'd
 For Betty, travell'd, and was quickly cur'd;
 And, Faith, I'll travel too, I scorn to boast
 My Courage, yet I think I'm stout as most.

T. I wish thou had'st enjoy'd thy just Desire,
 And gain'd thy Love; but if thou wilt retire,
 Serve Prology, for he'll reward thy Pain;
 Believ'r, he loves a stout and honest Man.

E. What other Virtues? T. Oh! the greatest Mind,
 The sweetest Temper, generous, and kind!
 He marks his Friend, but more he marks his Foe,
 His Hand is always open to bestow.

Petition modestly, he grants the Thing,
 And freely gives, as it becomes a King;
 And therefore, Lover, if you bravely dare
 To tie your Snapfack on, and go to War;
 If thou can'st keep thy Post, and stand thy Ground,
 And throw back on thy Foe the coming Wound,
 To Egypt haste, make haste, e'er Youth decays,
 First from our Temples Age begins her Race,
 Thence whit'ning Time creeps softly o'er the Face.
 Go on whilst Youth is green, and Strength does last;
 For when old Age draws nigh, the Time is past.

IDYLLIUM XV.

*Two tatling Gossips go to see the Pomp at Adonis's Feast, prepar'd by Arsinoe Ptolomy, Philadelphus's Queen :
The Humours of the Women he hits exactly ; intermixes some Praises of the King, and describes the Glory of the Pomp, to gratify the Queen.*

The Persons are Gorgo, Eunoe, Praxinoe, Nurse, Stranger, and Mother.

To Mr. RICE WILLIAMS, of Wadham-College.

G. Sweet-heart, is my Praxinoe at Home ?
E. She is, dear Gorgo ; but how late you come ?
P. I scarce expected you, and sate alone :
A Chair and Cushion, E. Ready. P. Pray sit down.
G. Ah me ! I scarce could get alive along,
So close the People press, so great the Throng ;
Coaches thro' ev'ry Street, and Liveries shine,
Beside, your Dwelling is so far from mine.
P. Yes, my cross Son must leave his former Seat,
And chuse upon the World's Edge this Retreat,
More like a filthy Cave, than like a House ;
And this he does, kind Heart, to sep'rate us,
My constant Plague, and my continual Cross. }
G. Soft Words, pray, Madam, soft, see here's your Son,
Look how he eyes you, and begins to frown.
P. Cheer up, my Child, I did not mean thy Dad.
N. He understands her, he's a pretty Lad.

E

P. H.

P. He went last Night (old Faults are all forgot)
 To buy some Soap, and what d'ye think he bought?
 A ~~Sale~~, long-sided Fool, dull Booby, ~~see~~
 G. ~~At me!~~ and ~~more~~ ~~to do~~, a ~~spinning~~ Fool,
 Last Market-day he went to cheapen Wooll,
 And there five Fleeces for five Crowns he bought,
 All coath'd Sheep's Wooll, mere Dirt, not worth a Groat.
 But take your Hood and Scarf, and pray let's go;
 Let's haste to Court; for there's a gawdy Show,
 Adonis Feast, and, as I lately heard,
 Our Royal Queen hath glorious Sights prepar'd.
 P. Great Folks have all Things fine; but pray now tell
 What you, for I saw nought, or nought so well.
 G. Another Day; but now the Minure calls,
 We that have nought to do, have Time for Tales.
 P. Maid, Water quickly; Faith, I'll break your Head,
 Go set it down. These Cars so love a Bed,
 Drive them away, they'll spoil my Cloth of State;
 But first the Water, there's most need of that.
 See how she speeds! come pour; but why so soon?
 A little more; what makes you wet my Gown?
 Well, now I'm fairly wash'd, the Gods be bless'd;
 But bring me streight the Key of my great Chest.
 G. This Mantau sits extremely well, I vow;
 What Price the Stuff? Pray, Madam, let me know?
 P. It cost me twenty Shillings half a Crown;
 'Twas dear, beside the Work was all my own.
 G. 'Tis rare. P. Your Servant, Madam, bring my Hood
 And Scarf, and dress me in the newest Mode.
 Dear Chuck, you must not go, my dear Delight,
 For there are ~~Burbers~~, and the Horles bite.
 Nay, you may cry, Peace, Peace, dear Mother's Child;
 Nay, cry, but, Chuck, I must not have you kill'd.
 Here, Betty, take the Boy, and stay at Home;
 Call Pretty in, and wait here till I come.
 O, Jammy! dear Gorge, here's a Throng!
 I wonder how we two shall get along!
 Great Prolomy, beside a thousand Things
 In which thou hast excell'd the former Kings;

How

OF THEOCRITUS.

51

How many Profits have thy Care bestow'd,
 Since Lagus dy'd, and rose into a God?
 Nong now, as heretofore, infest the Street,
 Pick-pockets crowd, and jostle all they meet.
 What shall we do? You see we strive in vain;
 Ah, Dear! I wish I was at Home again.
 The King's great Horse is come, stand farther, Friend,
 Don't tread upon me, see he rears an End;
 Look how he bounds! oh! whither shall we run?
 Alas, poor Soul! he'll throw his Rider down.
 Well, I am glad I did not bring my Son.
 G. Cheer up, Praxinoe, come, the Danger's past,
 And they are gone before, let's mend our Haste.
 P. Well, now I'm coming to my self again,
 A Horse, and a cold Serpent's winding Train
 I always hated; fye, we move too slow;
 Look there behind, what Tides of People flow!
 G. Mother, is't you within? M. Yes, Child, 'tis I.
 G. Can we get in pray, Mother? M. Daughter, try;
 For he that never tries, can ne'er enjoy:
 The Greeks by trying, Daughter, conquer'd Troy.
 P. She leaves us with a Riddle; what she means,
 God knows! but sure she hath some hidden Sense.
 Women know all below, and all above,
 Even how Queen Juno was betroth'd to Jove.
 But look Praxinoe, how the People wait!
 How great a Throng attends the crowded Gate!
 P. A vast one, Gorgo! come, 'tis best to join Hands round; here, Gorgo, clap your Hand in mine.
 Take Entick Eunoe, that we may not lose
 Each other; come, thrust all, and still keep close.
 Ah me! my Veil is rent; pray, why d'ye press
 My Gown? Good Sir, may Heav'n conspire to bless,
 And you be happy, Sir, as you forbear.
 S. I cannot; yet I'll take the greatest Care.
 P. The Crowd increases, and they thrust like Swine.
 S. Come, chear up, Madam, we are all got in.
 P. Well, may the bounteous Gods reward thy Pain.
 For helping us, thou art an honest Man.

Poor Eumoe's jostled still, she'll lose her Hood ;
 Thrust, Eumoe, stoutly thrust, and break the Crowd.
 We are all in, as one (a Story) said,
 When he had got his Mistress fast in Bed.

G. Praxinoe, look what Hangings grace the Rooms !
 How fine, how rich, sure wrought in heav'nly Looms !
 Oh strange ! what Hands could these fine Things design ?
 What Mortal Pencil draw so sweet a Line ?

How real they appear ? They seem to move,
 They are alive, I'm sure they can't be wove.

Man's a wise Thing ; but see on yonder Bed
Adonis lies, Down o'er his Cheeks is spread,
 Lovely Adonis, lov'd amongst the Dead.

S. Hift, hift, your tatling silly Talk forbear,
 Like Turtles you have Mouths from Ear to Ear.

G. And who are you ? Pray, what have you to say
 If we will talk ? Seek those that will obey.

Would you the Syracusan Women rule ?

Besides, to tell you more, you meddling Fool,
 We are Corinthians, that's no great Disgrace,
Bellerophon himself did boast that Race.

We speak our Language, use the Dorick Tone,
 And, Sir, the Dores, sure, may use their own.

P. Our Husbands are enough, let none pretend
 To rule beside ; you are a sawcy Friend,
 I'm ne'er beholding t' ye, and there's an end.

G. Peace, Peace, Praxinoe, straight in charming Lays
 A Maid shall sing the dead Adonis Praise,
 More soft than Sperchis in a mournful Song ;
 Hark ! she prepares her Voice, it won't be long.

Great Goddess, Joy of the Idalian Grove,
 To whom high Eryx bows, fair Queen of Love,
 How charming was thy sweet Adonis led,
 By soft-foot Hours, from 'midst the silent Dead ?
 The twelfth Month came, when from the Shades below
 Restor'd, what Beauty fate upon his Brow ?
 The Hours the slowest of the Gods, 'tis true,
 Yet pleasing, for they still bring something new.

Kind

OF THEOCRITUS.

53.

Kind you (this Story says) did first remove Fair Berenice to the Seats above,
 And bath'd the Mortal in a Cup of Love.
 And now, Asinus; Helen's equal Face,
 In just Return does thy Adonis grace
 With all the Fruit the various Earth can yield;
 The silver Basket brings from every Field
 The choicest Flowers that please the curious Eye,
 In Gold the Syrian Odours breathe and die;
 Of Flour and Honey mix'd, the sweetest Cake
 That Womens Luxury or Art can make.
 The Earth and Ocean give a vast Supply,
 And Air sends all the various Kinds that fly:
 She raises fresh imaginary Groves,
 And all around there flutter wanton Loves;
 As new-fledg'd Thrushes, whilst the old One sings,
 Leap quick from Bough to Bough, and try their Wings.
 O Gold! see there two Ivory Eagles fly,
 And bear young Ganymed thro' the yielding Sky:
 See Purple Tap'stry, softer far than Sleep,
 This he'll confess, that feeds Milesian Sheep.
 Oh! happy Riches, see two Beds are made,
 And Venus here, there fair Adonis laid;
 A youthful Bridegroom, just mature for Bliss,
 No prickly Beard makes rough his pleasing Kiss.
 Let Venus have him, and his Sweets embrace;
 To Morrow e'er the Dew forsakes the Grass,
 We'll bear him where the Waves foam round the Shore,
 Our Hair all loose, our Coats let down before,
 Our Breasts all bear; and as we march along,
 With mournful Voice, begin this Funeral Song.
Adonis, of the Hero's you alone
 Now come to us, now go to Acheron;
 Not Agamemnon, not stout Ajax knew,
 And none enjoy'd the Favour like to you:
 Not Hector, fruitful Priam's stoutest Joy,
 Not Pyrhus marching from his conquer'd Troy:
 The ancient Lapithæ, Ducalion's Race;
 Or brave Pelaggi, Argo's chiefest Grace.

Kind

Kind now Adonis, next Year kind remain,
 Now, welcome, welcome when you come again.
 G. Ah, dear Praxinoë ! these are curious Things:
 O, happy Creature ! oh, how well she sings!
 But I must go, for should my Husband come,
 (He has not din'd) and not find me at Home,
 How he would fret ; he's pettish, hates Delay,
 Nor when he's hungry would I come in's Way.
 Farewel, Adonis, now thy Pomp must cease ;
 But still return, and still our Joys increase.

IDYLLIUM XVI.

He complains that Poetry meets not a suitable Reward from Great Men, for that Immortality which it bestows upon them.

To his very good Friend JOHN DRYDEN, Esq;

THIS is the Muses, this the Poets Care,
 To sing the Gods, and Men renown'd for War.
 The Muses Goddesses make Gods their Theme ;
 We Men sing Men, and raise them vast Esteem.
 But who that lives below our Pains regards ?
 What open Hand deals suitable Rewards ?
 Or who receive us when we offer Fame ?
 And send us back more wealthy than we came ?
 The Muses baffled, thus turn Home again
 With naked Feet, they sigh, they weep, complain,
 And frown at me, when they have gone in vain. }
 Deep in the Bottom of my empty Cleft,
 A Place too hollow, and too hard for Rest,

They

They sit and mourn ; on their cold Knees they lay
 Their bending Heads, and sigh and pine away ;
 For who is brave ? and who regards a Wit ?
 I know not ; few, ah ! few in Praise delight,
 For great and noble Deeds as heretofore,
 Their captive Thoughts are ty'd to baser Ore.
 Their gripping Hands they in their Bosom fold,
 And scarce will give the Rust that eats their Gold.
 They cry, near is my Shirt, more near my Skin ;
 Must I supply the Hunger of the Nine ?
 Let me grow rich in Wealth, and those in Sense ;
 A Poet is the Care of Providence.

What need of more, since Homer lives ? he brings
 No Charge upon me, yet the best he sings.

Poor Men ! what profits precious Ore that lies
 Heap'd up within, to feed the greedy Eyes ?
 It yields a diff'rent Profit to the Wise.

Some on themselves, some Part on Wits they spend ;
 Some Part their Kinsmen share, and some their Friend.
 To ev'ry Man from them some Goods accrue,
 And still the Gods receive their sacred Due.
 He's kind and gen'rous, nobly treats his Guests ;
 He never cloy, but pleases with his Feasts.
 But chiefly to the Muses Sons they give,
 That after Death their lasting Fame may live ;
 And that they may not sit and mourn below,
 As those whose Hands are harden'd by the Plough ;
 Who sit and sigh, and with a sad Complaint
 For ever weep hereditary Want.

Antiochus once kept a Kingly Board,
 A thousand menial Servants call'd him Lord.
 A thousand Heifers fed at Scopa's Stall,
 Ten thousand horned Bulls low'd thro' his Vale.
 The kind Creonda fed their num'rous Flocks,
 Their brouzing Goats still hung on thousand Rocks ;
 Yet when their naked Souls began to float,
 Breath'd out in Air, and stow'd in Charon's Boat,
 They left their Wealth beyond the Stygian Shore,
 The crazy Vessel could not waft their Ore ;

And

And each had lain amidst the Vulgar, lost,
 Unheard, untalk'd of, like a common Ghost,
 Unless his Poet, with exalted Rage,
 Had struck his Harp, and giv'n them future Age.
 'Tis Verse that does with lasting Honours grace
 The swiftest Horse that wins the sacred Race;
 His Crowns had wither'd, he had lost his Name,
 Too slow to keep an equal Pace with Fame.
 Who had the Lycians, who the Trojans known?
 What Fame once Female Cyclus Glory shown,
 Unless a Poet, with immortal Song,
 Had told their Fights, and made their Wars so long
Ulysses, he thro' various Dangers tost
 For seven long Years, that touch'd at ev'ry Coast;
 That he who saw the Syrian Shades, and liv'd,
 That scap'd the Cyclops, had his Fame surviv'd:
Eumæus, mingl'd with the common Dead,
 Had lain as nameless as the Ox he fed;
 And wholly vanish'd with his parting Breath,
 If Homer had not snatch'd his Name from Death.
 The Muses raise Mens Worth, their Fame they spread,
 Whilst Heirs consume the Riches of the Dead.
 And 'tis a Task, I'm sure, of equal Ease,
 To tell how many Tempests toss the Seas;
 With what fierce Storms the troubl'd Ocean roars;
 How many Waves it rolls to trembling Shores.
 To wash a Blackmore white, as to unbind
 A griping Niggard's close contracted Mind,
 And force him to be generous and kind.
 A Curse on such; vast Heaps of useless Ore
 May those enjoy, and yet still wish for more.
 'Twas always so; and 'tis my Humour still,
 Much more than Wealth, I value Mens good Will:
 And now I seek what Patron I may chuse,
 And where I may be welcome with my Muse;
 For Poets find but small Returns of Love
 Without their Muse, thus stands the Will of Jove.
 The Heav'n's not weary whilst it whirls the Sun,
 And thousand Steeds shall draw the Chariot on;

A Man shall rise, that shall my Songs employ,
 As great as fam'd Achilles fought at Troy;
 As great as Alex, where smooth Sinuis flow'd,
 And Phrygian Ilu's Tomb lay drown'd in Blood.
 The Carthaginians dread approaching War,
 Forget their Fury, and consent to fear.
 The Syracusan Troops spread o'er the Field,
 Their right Hand grace a Spear, their left a Shield.
 These Hiero leads as ancient Heroes brave;
 His dreadful Crest doth o'er his Shoulders wave:
 But oh! our Guardian Jove, revenge our Blood,
 And toss our Foes o'er the Sardinian Flood;
 Scatter their Force, and send few Home to tell
 The Wives and Children how their Fathers fell.
 Let old Inhabitants possess their Isle,
 And raise new Towns where Foes did lately spoil;
 The Fields be green, and thro' the fruitful Plain
 Great Flocks of Sheep grow fat, and bleat again.
 The lab'ring Oxen bend beneath the Plough,
 And, slowly walking thro' the Vallies, low.
 The Fields be reap'd, whilst under ev'ry Shade
 The Insects sing, and make the Reapers glad.
 The Spiders weave in Shields, all free from fear,
 And hardly know the very Name of War.
 Let rising Poets bear the sounding Praise
 Of Hiero beyond the Scythian Seas;
 Beyond proud Babylon extend his Fame,
 And tell to distant Worlds his glorious Name.
 I am but one, but more Jove's Daughters love,
 More wise than I am; and more apt to move.
 And these smooth Arethusa's Streams shall sing,
 The brave Sicilians, and their valiant King.
 Ye Goddesses, that Orchomenium grace,
 The Scourge and Hatred of the Theban Race,
 Uncall'd I'll stay, to those that shall invite,
 My Muse shall offer Honour and Delight.
 I'll never leave you; what will Men receive Without the Graces? What is fit to give?
 O! may I ever with the Graces live!

IDYLLIUM XVII.

A Panegyrick to King PTOLEMY.

TO AMBROSE BROWNE, Esq;

Begin with Jove, my Muse, and end with Jove,
 If you would sing the greatest God above;
 But if you would the best of Men rehearse,
 Let Alexander's great Name adorn your Verse;
 Let him the first, Maest, King, your Songs employ,
 The Darling of Mankind, the common Joy.
 The Heroes born of Gods, and great in Fame,
 Had noble Poets to record their Name;
 And I, well skipp'd in Song, with lasting Lays,
 Sing him, as a God we do revere with Praise.
 In shady Ida, where the Woods are thick,
 The Wood-man comes, but doubts where first to strike:
 And where shall I? There crowd a thousand Things,
 With which the Gods have bless'd the best of Kings.
 His Father Jove, who so bravely great,
 So deeply skill'd in all the Arts of State?
 What Age could boast a Prince so great, so good?
 His Mind was high, and noble as his Blood.
 Him Jove doth grace with an immortal Throne,
 And give a Golden Palace next his own.
 Next Alexander sits, the Wise, the Great,
 A miter'd God, and checks the Persian State.
 Just opposite Alcides Throne does shine,
 Of sparkling Diamond made, the Work divine;
 And whilst on Nectar with the Gods he feasts,
 He smiles to see his Race his equal Guests.

On each Great Jove Benevolence from Age bestow'd,
 And call'd immortal, rais'd into a God;
 When fragrant Nectar Bowls have rais'd his Rises,
 And from the Feast, he to his Wife retires,
 His Ensigns he delivers to the sons,
 One bears his knotty Club, and one his Bow.
 With these they both in decent Order move,
 And thus to beauteous Hebe's Bed of Love
 Their Father lead, the great Increase of Jove.

How Berenice shone! his charming Bride,
 Her Sex's Glory, and her Parents Bride.
 Her Venus nurs'd with a peculiar Care,
 And bless'd with all the Charms that grace the Fair;
 That ev'n bold Fame it self scarce dares to tell,
 That any Prince e'er lov'd his Wife so well,
 As gen'rous Ptolemy his beauteous Queen;
 And yet he meets with greater Love again.
 He quits his State, and Bus'ness of his Thrones,
 He leaves his Kingdom to his loyal Sons,
 Whilst he to her with hasty Wilkes moves,
 And goes to play the Hero in his Loves.
 A faithless Wife lets all her Thoughts and Cares
 On others rove, with easy Pains she bears;
 Her House is full, but of the num'rous Race
 Not one can shew the joyful Father's Face.
 Fair Venus, chiefest Beauty of the Sky,
 She liv'd thy Care, nor can her Honour die:
 Your Kindness snatch'd her from the Seygian Shore;
 E'er grisly Chiron came to waste her o'er,
 You gave a Shrine, and taught us to adore.
 Just like a falling Star thrown down by Fate,
 You caught, and made her Partner of your State;
 Whilst kind to all, she gentle Cares inspires,
 And warms the Lover's Breasts with pleasing Fires.
 The fair Deipala did to Polus bear
 Stout Diomed, that mighty Son of War;
 And beauteous Thetis to her Polus bore
 The fam'd Achilles on the Gracian Shore;

But

But Berenice hath these Births out-done,
 She brought great Rome as great a Son;
 First Cos danc'd thee, then Mankind's Delight,
 She took thee at thy first Approach to Light;
 For there thy Mother to Lar pray'd
 To ease her Throes, and found a Treedy Aid;
 She came, stood by, and gently lov'd her Pain;
 Thy very Birth was easy as thy Reign.
 The Island took thee in her Arms, and smil'd,
 To view the Father's Image in the Child.
 She shouted, and she said, Ah! lovely Boy,
 Be born, thy Father's Soul, be born, my Joy.
 Welcome, on me as great a Fame bestow,
 As Delos does to her Apollo owe.
 Thus spake the Isle: An Eagle soar'd above,
 And mix'd with Clouds, the Bird of mighty Jove,
 With joyful Sound thrice clap'd auspicious Wings;
 'Twas Jove's own Sign, Jove is the Guard of Kings:
 But whom he loves, as soon as he began,
 That lives the Potent, that the happy Man;
 All else must yield, and o'er the Sea and Land
 With conqu'ring Arms he spread a wide Command.
 A thousand Nations boast their fruitful Plains,
 Where gentle Jove descends in easy Rains;
 But none such Crops as sandy Egypt flows,
 Where Nile with his enriching Streams o'erflows,
 And what the barren Clouds deny, bestows.
 No Nation bears, no Nation boasts to see
 So many Towns, and Men of Art as she.
 Full thirty thousand Towns enjoy the Sway of Ptolemy, and eagerly obey.
 The stout Phanicians too have felt his Sword;
Arabia, Syria, Lybia call him Lord.
 The Ethiopians, the Pamphilian Horse,
 The Lycians, Carians own his nobler Force.
 The Isles, for where his Mercy spreads her Wings,
 Homage to him, and Praise to all she brings:
 So far his Scepters reach; and Sea, and Land,
 And purling Streams obey his just Command.

Vast Troops of Horse and Foot, well arm'd for War,
 So dreadful gay in graceful Banks appear,
 That ev'n their proudest Foes consent to fear.
 His Treasure richer than e'er known before;
 And other Kings scarce wish so great a Store.
 All Nations send their Customs ev'ry Day,
 And their due Tribute to his Ocean pay.
 The Farmer fearless ploughs his fruitful Soil;
 No hostile Navies press the quiet Nile:
 None leaps ashore, and frights the lab'ring Swains;
 None robs us of our Flocks, and spoils the Plains.
 Thus Ptolemy secures his Land from Harms;
 So fear'd by all he sits, so great in Arms;
 So careful to preserve his ancient Right;
 This shews a King, and for new Conquests fight;
 And yet he scorn's to hoard his useless Ore,
 As painful Ants still turn their bury'd Store.
 With much the Temples of the Heroes shine;
 His first-Fruits and his Gifts fill ev'ry Shrine.
 Much Gold to pow'rful neighb'ring Kings he sends,
 Much to his Subjects, much to valiant Friends.
 None fam'd for Song, none great in Arts appears,
 No charming Voice can ravish list'ning Ears,
 But streight he Favours, he Rewards imparts,
 And sends them Presents equal to their Arts;
 And therefore Poets, with exalted Rage,
 Send down their Patron's Praise to future Age.
 At what more noble can the Wealthy aim,
 Than to secure a fair and lasting Fame?
 Of Great Atrides this remains alone,
 Whilst all the Stores of Wealth he rais'd, are gone;
 Whate'er he brought from Troy, hath 'scap'd the Light,
 And now lies bury'd in eternal Night.
 He first his glorious Parents made divine;
 To both he Incense burns, and rears a Shrine.
 How great they stand? How Gems their Shrines enfold,
 And hide the Ivory, and the poorer Gold?
 How great they stand? What various Goods bestow?
 Supply our Wants, and guard frail Man below?

He stains red Altars with a thousand Beasts,
 As Months roul round, and bring the solemn Feasts;
 He and his Queen; than whom kind Fortune led
 No fairer Woman to a greater Bed;
 There she with Joy the nat'ral Ties improves,
 And both as Brother, and as Husband loves.
 This Gods approve, thus they themselves are ty'd;
 And Juno lives Jove's Sister and his Bride.
 Fair perfum'd Iris makes one Bed for both,
 Where Pleasure's heighten'd by eternal Youth.

Hail, glorious Ptolemy; hail, mighty King;
 Thee equal to the Gods my Muse shall sing;
 And future Age shall all my Songs approve;
 Great King, beg Vertue and Increase of Jove.

IDYLLIUM XVIII.

An Epithalamium at the Marriage of Helena and Menelaus.

TO EDWARD COURTHOPE, Esq;

AT Sparta's Palace twenty beauteous Maids,
 The Pride of Greece, fresh Garlands crown'd their
 With Hyacinth and twining Parsly drest, (Heads,
 Grac'd joyful Menelaus Marriage-Feast;
 When lovely Helen, great in conqu'ring Charms,
 Resign'd her willing Beauty to his Arms:
 They danc'd around, Joy flow'd from ev'ry Tongue,
 And the great Dome resounded with the Song.
 And why, fair Bridegroom, why so sleepy grown?
 And why to Bed e'er shady Night comes on?
 What, have you danc'd too much? Wine seiz'd your Head?
 Or are you drowsy, that you must to Bed?

But

But if you needs must sleep, then sleep alone ;
 But why must Helen too, your Bride, be gone ?
 Why must she leave her tender Mother thus ?
 She should sit up, and play, and dance with us ;
 She should sit up 'till the bright Sun should rise,
 And Stars recede, less beauteous than her Eyes :
 For, Menelaus, she for all thy Life,
 For Morning, Night, and Noon must be thy Wife.
 O happy Bridegroom ! thee a lucky Sneeze
 To Sparta welcom'd, where the Youths of Greece,
 Her chiefeft Pride, did offer humble Love ;
 Yet you were chose to be ally'd to Jove.
 A Beauty, such as never Greece did view,
 Now sleeps between the common Sheets with you.
 O happy Bridegroom ! what thy Bride shall bear,
 If like herself, it must be wond'rous fair.
 Two hundred Spartan Maids, her Equals, we
 That wrestled, fought, and ran as well as she,
 And ev'n out-did the Men ; yet none appear
 A spotless Beauty, if compar'd to her.
 Just as the Morning shews her lovely Grace,
 When Winter's gone, and Night withdraws her gloomy
 Just so doth Helen's charming Beauties rise, (Face ;
 Tall, fair, and fram'd by Nature to surprize.
 As Trees a Field, swift Sreeds a Chariot grace,
 So Sparta is adorn'd by Helen's Face.
 In all, the Bride does easily excel,
 None spins with so much Art, none weaves so well.
 When she Diana or Minerva sings,
 None tunes so soft as she the speaking Strings ;
 That she, whose Motions charm, whose Looks surprize,
 And thousand Cupids wanton in her Eyes.
 Ah ! fair, ah ! lovely, of an envy'd Life ;
 Ah ! fair, and bless'd in being made a Wife :
 But we will run thro' yonder spacious Mead,
 And crop fresh flow'ry Crowns to grace thy Head.
 Mindful of Helen still, as tender Lambs,
 Not wean'd as yet, when hungry, mind their Dams,

We'll first low Lotus pluck, and Crowns compose,
 And to thy Honour grace the shady Boughs:
 From Silver Boxes sweetest Oils shall flow,
 And press the Flow'rs that rise as sweet below;
 And then inscribe this Line, that all may see,
Pay due Obedience, I am Helen's Tree.
 All Joy, fair Bride, and happy Bridegroom, Joy,
 Let kind Latona give a lovely Boy;
 Let Venus, Goddess Venus, mutual Love,
 And lasting Riches, be bestow'd by Jove,
 That still they may descend, and grace the Throne,
 From a great Father, to a greater Son.
 Sleep in each other's Arms, and raise Desire,
 Let ardent Breathings fan your mutual Fire:
 But rise betimes, forget not, we'll return
 When first the crowing Cock shall wake the Morn;
 When thro' his feather'd Throat he sends his Voice,
 O! Hymen, Hymen, at this Feast rejoice.

IDYLLIUM XIX.

On CUPID stung by a Bee.

W<sup>H</sup>en wanton Love design'd to thief,
 And steal the Honey from the Hive,
 An impious Bee his Finger stung,
 And thus reveng'd the proffer'd Wrong.
 He blew his Fingers, vex'd with Pain,
 He stamp'd and star'd, but all in vain;
 At last, unable to endure,
 To Venus runs, and begs a Cure,
 Complaining that so slight a Touch,
 And little Thing, should wound so much.

She

She smil'd, and said, how like to thee,
My Son, is that unlucky Bee?
Thy self art small, and yet thy Dart
Wounds deep, ah! very deep the Heart.

IDYLLIUM XX.

A Shepherd complains of the Coyneſs of a City-Maid, who refuſ'd his proffer'd Kiſs.

To his good-humour'd Friend Mr. ALEXANDER CROOK, of Wadham-College.

Eunica flouted me, ſhe ſcorn'd my Kiſs,
And when I proffer'd, answer'd with a Hiſs;
Be gone, rough Shepherd, thou doſt aſk in vain,
I ſaith I am not us'd to kiſs a Swain;
The City Lips I preſs, and only them;
Thou ſhould not kiſs me, no, not in a Dream.
How odd thy Courtſhip! and how dull thy Jeſt!
How languiſhing thy Words! and how expreſs!
How ſoft and ſweet thy Voice! Thy Looks how fair!
How ſmooth thy Chin! What Curls adorn thy Hair!
Thy Lips are broken out, and black thy Hand;
Thy Smell is rank; be gone, I ſhall be ſtain'd.
This ſaid, then thrice ſhe ſpit, and view'd me round;
From Head to Foot, and mutter'd ſtill, and frown'd;
Still ſcornfully ſhe look'd, and might'ry proud
Of her fair Face; ſhe ſneer'd, and laugh'd aloud.
My Blood began to boil, my Face was fluſh'd,
And, like a Roſe with Dew o'ercharg'd, I bluſh'd.
She left me ſtreight; but I am vex'd at this,
That ſhe, proud Slur, ſhould flout, when I would kiſs.

Am I not handsome? Tell me, smiling Swains,
 For I was once the Beauty of the Plains.
 Tell me, have I no Charms, no pleasing Grace?
 Or hath some God on sudden chang'd my Face?
 For I was handsome once, my Cheeks were red,
 My Beard, like Hy round an Oak, was spread,
 And bushy Hair, like Purshy, crown'd my Head. }
 My snowy Forehead two black Eye-brows crost;
 My Eyes as grey as Palla's self could boast;
 My Mouth more sweet than Curds, my Words did flow
 As smooth as Oil, and soft as falling Snow:
 My Songs are charming, whilst my Flocks do feed
 I blow my Hautboy, Pipe, or Oaten Reed.
 Oft have I seen my Lambs forsake their Grass,
 And list'ning by, with silent Wonder gaze;
 And all the Country Maids my Face esteem;
 They kiss, and beg me I would stay with them.
 Are these small Charms, that she should these despise? }
 But I'm a Shepherd Swain, for that she flies;
 For that the City-Maids refuse a Kiss.
 Well, let them scorn, poor Fools, they hardly know
 That beauteous Bacchus fed a Herd below;
 Or that fair Venus wanton'd with a Swain,
 And fed his Cattel in the Phrygian Plain;
 With sweet Adonis oft she prov'd the Joy
 In Groves, in Groves she mourn'd the lovely Boy.
Endymion was a Swain, he kept a Flock,
 And yet for him the Moon her Skies forsook;
 She scorn'd a Scepter, and embrac'd a Crook. }
 One Cave held both, with him she reap'd Delight,
 Came down, lay by, and kiss'd him all the Night.
 Ev'n Rhea mourns a Swain, and mighty Jove
 Took Eagle's Wings, and bore a Swain above.
 A Swain this proud Eunica scorns alone,
 Better than Venus, Rhea, or the Moon.
Venus, the Fault was yours, you taught her Pride;
 May therefore thine, thy Love be still deny'd.

May you endure an injur'd Lover's Pain,
Ne'er kiss thy Sweet, ne'er wanton o'er the Plain,
But lie alone all Night, and wish in vain.

IDYLLIUM XXI.

A Discourse of two Fisher-men upon a Dream.

To Mr. THOMAS DUNSTAR, of Wadham-College.

TIS Poverty, dear Friend, improves our Arts,
It teaches Wit, and working Thoughts imparts;
For Cares chase Sleep from his laborious Head,
Who swears to earn, before he eats his Bread. <sup>1</sup>
If lazy Slumbers o'er his Eye-lids creep,
Streight noisy Cares rush in, and break his Sleep.
Two good old Fishers slept, their Bed was Sedge,
Their Roof was Straw, their Walls a rotten Hedge,
And round just by lay Baskets, Hooks, and Lines,
Their Wiers, sedgey Nets, their Rods, and Skins,
Drawn up on some old Plank, a tatter'd Boat;
Their Pillow Straw, their Rug a ragged Coat;
Their Caps hung by, upon a broken Oar;
These were their Tackling, and this all their Store.
Not one small Pot upon their Shelf was laid,
All useless seem'd, but what concern'd their Trade.
Thus bless'd they liv'd, and happy in Content,
With their Companions, Poverty and Want.
No Neighbour near, and ev'ry rising Tide
Their Hovel reach'd, and shook its ratt'ring Side.
From 'midst of Heav'n the Moon view'd all below,
When Dreams of Labour wak'd the sleeping two;
Each

Each with his Thumb wip'd Rest from off his Eyes,
And sang, and cheer'd themselves with these Replies.

A. They lye, dear Friend, that say the Night decays
When Summer comes, and Jove brings longer Days ;
For I have seen a thousand Dreams to Night,
Long tedious Dreams, and yet 'tis far from Light.

B. You blame the Summer, but unjustly blame,
The Hours are still forc'd on, their Pace the same ;
But vexing Cares, that in a busy Throng
Disturb your Head, do make Night seem so long.

A. Can you interpret Dreams, Friend, tell me true ?
I've dreamt fine Things, which I would tell to you ;
For that will ease me, and divert my Care,
As we our Fish, so we our Dreams will share.

B. Then tell thy Friend. A. If you remember well,
We sup'd too late, and made a sparing Meal :
On yonder shelving Rock methought I stood,
And stoop'd, intent upon the quiet Flood ;
I saw the Fish, my Hook let gently down,
And shook my cheating Bait to draw them on.
A great One bit, (for Fish is still my Theme,
As Dogs of Bones, so I of Fishes dream)
I strook, and hung him fast, I saw the Blood,
The Weight was great, I'm sure it bent the Rod ;
I strove to reach him, for my Line was weak,
And, Faith, I fear'd my bending Hook would break.
Dost prick me, (for he prick'd) I'll grasp thee more,
And so at last I drew my Prey to Shore,
A golden Fish, I stood amaz'd, and fear'd
'Twas one of Neptune's own beloved Herd ;
Or one of Sea-green Amphitrite's Train,
A noble Fish, the Treasure of the Main.
I loos'd him gently, and did strictly look
That no small Grain stuck round the barbed Hook :
With Cords I drew him, and devoutly swore,
That I would venture out to Sea no more ;
But stay at Home, and make my self a King.
At this I wak'd : Do you adjust the Thing.

Pray

Pray tell me what you think, for I'm afraid
That I am bound to keep the Oath I made.
B. Fear not, my Friend, you did not swear ; for why,
You found no Fish, a Viper's but Lye !
And therefore go, and draw the usual Streams,
Seek real Fish, nor starve with golden Dreams.

IDYLLIUM XXII.

A scorn'd Shepherd hangs himself. The cruel Fair is kill'd by the Statue of Cupid.

To Mr. RILY, Painter to his Majesty K. CHARLES II.

AN amorous Shepherd lov'd a charming Boy,
As fair as Thought could frame, or Wish enjoy ;
Unlike his Soul, ill-natur'd and unkind,
An Angel's Body, with a Fury's Mind :
How great a God Love was, he scorn'd to know,
How sharp his Arrows, and how strong his Bow,
What raging Wounds he scatters here below. }
His Talk was rude, and his Address the same,
He gave no Comfort to the Shepherd's Flame.
No cherry Lips, no Rose his Cheeks did dye,
No pleasing Fire did sparkle in his Eye,
Where eager Thoughts with fainting Vertue strove,
No soft Discourse nor Kifs to ease his Love ;
But as a Lyon on the Lybian Plain
Looks on his Hunters, he beheld the Swain ;
His Lips still pouting, and his Eyes unkind,
His Forehead too was rough, as was his Mind ;
His Colour gone, and ev'ry pleasing Grace,
Beset by Fury, had forsook his Face ;

Yet

Yet 'mid'st his Passion, 'mid'st his Frowns he mov'd;
 As these were Charms, he was the more belov'd.
 But when o'ercome, he could endure no more,
 He came and wept before the hated Door;
 He wept and pin'd, he hung his sickly Head,
 The Threshold kiss'd, and thus at last he said:
 Ah, cruel Fair! and of a Tygres born!
 Ah, Sony Boy! compos'd of Frowns and Scorn!
 Unworthy of my Love, this Rope receive,
 The last, most welcome Present I can give.
 I'll never vex thee more, I'll cease to woe,
 And whither you condemned, freely go,
 Where certain Cures for Love, as Stories tell,
 Where dismal Shades, and dark Oblivion dwell;
 Yet did I drink the whole forgetful Stream,
 It would not drown my Love, nor quench my Flame.
 Thy cruel Doors I bid my last Adieu,
 Know what will come, and you shall find it true.
The Day is fair, but quickly yields to Shades;
The Lilly white, but when 'tis pluck'd, it fades;
The Violet lovely, but it withers soon;
Youth's Beauty charming, but 'tis quickly gone.
 The Time shall come, when you, proud Boy, shall prove
 The Heat of Passion, and the Rage of Love;
 Then shall thy Soul melt thro' thy weeping Eye,
 Whilst all shall smile, and you unpity'd die.
 Yet grant one Kindness, and I ask no more;
 When you shall see me hanging at the Door,
 Do not go proudly by, forbear to smile,
 But stay, sweet Boy, and gaze, and weep a while;
 Then take me down, and whilst some Tears are shed,
 Thy own soft Garment o'er my Body spread,
 And grant one Kiss, — one Kiss, when I am dead. }
 Ne'er fear, for you may safely grant me this,
 I shan't revive, tho' you could love and kiss.
 Then dig a Grave, there let my Love be laid;
 And when you part, say thrice, My Friend is dead:
 Or else go farther on, to please my Ghost,
 And cry, My best, my dearest Friend is lost;

And

OF THEOCRITUS.

71

And on my Monument inscribe this Rhime;
 The Witness of my Love, and of thy Crime;
*This Shepherd dy'd for Love, stay, Stranger, here,
 And weep, and cry, he lov'd a cruel Fair.*
 This said, he roll'd a Stone, a mighty Stone,
 Fate lent a Hand behind, and push'd it on,
 High by the Wall; on this he panting rose,
 And ty'd, and fitted well the fatal Noose;
 Then from the Place on which before he stood,
 He slipp'd, and hung the Door's unhappy Load;
 The Boy came forth, and with a scornful Mien,
 And smiling Look, beheld the tragick Scene.
 Hang there, said he; but O! how I despise
 So base, so mean a Trophy of my Eyes!
*The proudest Kings should fall by my Disdain,
 Too noble to be lost upon a Swain.*
 This said, he turn'd; and as he turn'd his Head,
 His Garments were polluted by the Dead;
 Thence to the Plays, and to the Baths did move,
 The Bath was sacred to the God of Love;
 For there he stood in comely Majesty,
 Smiles on his Cheeks, and Softness in his Eye;
 That Part of Marble, wrought into his Breast
 By Power divine, was softer than the rest,
 To shew how Pity did exactly suit
 With Love, and was his darling Attribute.
 The God leap'd forth, and dash'd the Boy, the Wound
 Let out his Soul, and as it fled, he groan'd.
*Hail, Lovers, hail, see here the Scornful dies
 A just and acceptable Sacrifice;
 Be kind, and Love for mutual Love return,
 For see the God takes Vengeance on my Scorn.*

IDYLLIUM XXIII.

Hercules in his Cradle kills two Serpents, which Juno sent to destroy him, &c.

To Mr. WILLIAM LATTON, of Wadham-
College.

Alcides ten Months old, a vigorous Child,
Alcmena fed, and laid him on a Shield,
 (The Shield from Pterilus Amphitryon won
 A great auspicious Cradle for his Son ;)
 With younger Iphiclus, of human Race,
 No Part of him was drawn from Jove's Embrace :
 On either Head her tender Hands she laid,
 And with a Mother's Fondness, thus she said ;
Sleep, sleep, dear Children, sleep, be free from Pain,
Rest well to Night, to Morrow wake again.
 This said, she stopp'd, and rock'd the sounding Shield,
Iphiclus wept, and young Alcides smil'd :
 Sleep seiz'd on both. Now Mid-night's Shade came on,
 The flying Bear in Haste was tumbling down,
 And broad Orion's Shoulder did appear
 Arm'd with his Sword, as chasing still the Bear.
 When wily Juno, full of envious Hate,
 Drove on two dreadful Serpents to the Gate,
 She forc'd the Doors, and shew'd the open Way,
 Designing young Alcides for their Prey :
 Their scaly Trains roll'd o'er the trembling Floor,
 Their fiery Eyes shot sulph'rous Flames before,
 And from their Jaws dropp'd Clods of putrid Gore. }
 When near they roll'd, and did the Infants touch,
 E'en Sleep it self streight fled at their Approach ;

The

The Children wak'd, and, by Jove's Order, Light
Shot thro' the gloomy Darkneſs of the Night.

Iphiclus cry'd as ſoon as he beheld

The Snakes twiſt round; and gaping o'er the Shield,
He kick'd the Cloaths, and toſs'd, for Flight prepar'd,
As if he meant to ſhun the Fate he fear'd.

But young Alcides ſtretch'd his Infant-hands,
And graſp'd the rolling Snakes with fatal Bands;
He ſeiz'd their ſwelling Throats, where ſtor'd by Fate
Their Poiſon Lyes, which e'en the Gods do hate:

In that Death dips her Darts, then takes her Rounds,
And on frail Mortals ſcatters certain Wounds:

Each twiſted round the Babe a dreadful Fold,
But ſtill he graſp'd, and took the firmer Hold;

'The Babe, not wean'd as yet, in Mind a Man,
He ſhew'd his Race as ſoon as he began:

Ne'er in his Nurſe's Arms was heard to cry,
No Tear e'er drop'd from his unwilling Eye.

At laſt tir'd out, they both extended lay
The Infant's Spoil, his firſt auſpicious Prey.

Alcmena's Ears firſt heard the tender-Cries,
She ſtarted firſt, and ſaid, Amphytrion, riſe;

Riſe, riſe, thy Aid a ſudden Danger calls,
Do'ſt hear how loud the younger Infant bawls?

Do'ſt ſee theſe Walls ſhine with unuſual Light?

For yet the Morning hath not chac'd the Night;

There's ſome ſtrange Thing, there is, riſe, riſe, my Dear,
From Danger free thy Babes, thy Wife from Fear.

She ſpake, Amphytrion roſe, ſuch Haſte he ſhew'd,
As nimble Light'ning from a breaking Cloud,

He ſnatch'd his Sword, which o'er his valiant Head
Hung always faſten'd to the Cedar Bed;

A ſtrong Belt held it, tough, and nearly made,

He graſp'd the Sheath, and drew the flaming Blade;

When ſtreight the Light withdrew its wond'rous Rays,
In Darkneſs left him, and in wild Amaze,

Still ſtartled more, Lights, Slaves, Slaves, Lights, he cries,
Lights, Slaves, deep Sleep ſat heavy on their Eyes.

Lights, Maids; they heard, and quick as the Command
 A flaming Torch now shone in ev'ry Hand;
 They all rush in, with troubled Haste they come,
 And busy Throngs streight fill the crowded Room.
 But when they saw two Snakes twist round the Child,
 They shriek'd, and wept; the young Alcides smil'd,
 Held out the Snakes, pleas'd with the gilded Sight,
 Laugh'd at his own Success, and their Affright;
 Disdain'd those Foes that with such Ease he slew,
 And at his Father's Feet the Monsters threw.
 Half dead Iphicles on her tender Breast
Alcmena clapp'd, and lull'd him into Rest:
 The other Babe on Skins of slaughter'd Sheep
Amphytrion laid, and then return'd to sleep.
 When thrice the Cock had crow'd to wake the Sun,
Alcmena starting from her Bed of Down,
Tiresias call'd, from whom Truth always fell,
 Scarce Phæbus knew the Mind of Fate so well.
 She told the Tale, and said, Thrice reverend Seer,
 Explain the Meaning, I'm prepar'd to hear;
 Nor yet to pleasure me, conceal the Doom,
 Or bad or good, what Fate hath wove, must come.
 Thus spake the Queen, and thrice his reverend Head
Tiresias shook, and thus at last he said:
 Hail, mighty Queen, the Pride of Persens Blood,
 Happy, and Mother of a future God.
 The Time shall come, as Years bring round the Days,
 When Grecian Maids shall sing Alcmena's Praise;
 And as they weave or whirl their Spindle round,
 From ev'ry Tongue Alcmena's Name shall sound.
 The Grecians Goddess thou shalt grace a Shrine,
 So Great thy Son shall be, and so Divine!
 A generous Hero ye shall mount on high,
 The noblest Burthen of the bending Sky:
 To him all Monsters, and all Men must yield,
 The Tyrant's Scourge, and the Oppressed's Shield.
 Twelve Labours pass'd, he shall the Skies enjoy,
 When Oeta's Flames have purg'd the base Alloy;

Be call'd their Son-in-Law, appease their Hate,
 Who rais'd these Snakes, and sent them to his Fate.
 Then Wolves shall see young Fawns approach their Den,
 And let them part unhurt and safe again ;
 So great a Scourge he shall to Monsters prove,
 And shed such Influence from his Seat above.
 But, Queen, observe, and let a Pile be made,
 Green Oaks, and Ash, and Birch, in Order laid:
 Then cut these Snakes, observè the Time they came
 To eat the Babe, and burn them o'er the Flame.
 At Morning-peep soon quench the blazing Wood,
 And scatter all the Ashes o'er the Flood,
 And thence return, but with a steady Pace,
 Nor look behind on the polluted Place:
 Then let pure Brimstone purge the Rooms, and bring Clear Fountain-water from the sweetest Spring.
 This mix'd with Salt, with blooming Olives crown'd,
 Spread o'er the Floor, and purge polluted Ground :
 Then kill a Boar to Jove, that free from Harms
 The Child may live, and Vict'ry crown his Arms.

This said, he bow'd, and, with a staggering Gate,
 For Years oppress'd him, reach'd his Ivory Seat.
 And now the Boy, his Mother's Pride, was grown
 Like rising Oaks, and thought Amphytrion's Son :
 In Letters Linus did his Mind enlarge,
 A generous Hero, watchful of his Charge :
Eumolpus tun'd his manly Voice to sing,
 And taught his Hand to strike the tuneful String.
Eurytus, famous for his vast Estate,
 To draw the Bow, and shoot as sure as Fate ;
 To leap, to wrestle, and to throw the Dart,
 He learn'd from Herc Autolycus's Art,
 Sweet Herme's Son, who when he fought his Foe,
 None dar'd, tho' distant, to behold his Brow ;
 Such frightful Fierceness did in's Looks appear,
 And shot thro' all amaz'd Spectators Fear.
 To drive the Chariot, and with steady Skill
 To turn, and yet not break the bending Wheel,

Amphytrion kindly did instruct his Son,
Great in that Art ; for he himself had won
Vast precious Prizes on the Argive Plains,
And still the Chariot, which he drove, remains, }
For nought but eating Time could break his Reins.
To wield his Sword, and to assault his Foe,
To use his Shield, and shun the coming Blow,
To order Battels, and to raise their Force,
Close Ambush lay, and lead the furious Horse,
Stout Castor taught, when he from Argos fled,
Rufely deserted by the Force he led.

When Tydeus Arms the fatal Conquest won,
And forc'd the weak Adrastus from his Throne,
Few of the Heroes equall'd him in Fight,
Her trembling Age had put strong Youth to Flight.

Thus grew the Boy his Mother's Care and Pride ;
His Bed was rais'd by his great Father's Side,
Spread with a Lyon's Skin, whose Jaws asright
The weaker Youths, but were this Boy's Delight.
When young, he often would unsheath their Paws,
And use his tender Hands to break their Jaws ;
And when one Tooth was broke, with Smiles would meet,

And cast his Trophies at his Mother's Feet.
His Food was roasted Flesh, his Loaf was great,
As large as e'en a labouring Swain could eat :
A sparing Meal, and unprepar'd at Night,
His Cloaths were made for Covering, not Delight.
Thus hardly bred, the mighty Hero grew
Well fitted for the Wonders he must do.

Imperfect in the Greek.

IDYLLIUM XXIV.

A Dialogue between Daphnis and a Shepherdess.

To THOMAS POWEL, of Wadham-College, Esq.

- D. PARIS a Herds-man Helen stole, 'tis said,
And she that kiss'd me, is as fair a Maid.
S. Pride not thy self, what empty Thing's a Kiss!
D. And yet that empty Thing is full of Bliss.
S. I wash my Mouth, and thus thy Kiss disdain.
D. Dost wash, my Dear? then come, let's kiss again.
S. Swain, thou should'st kiss thy Heifer, not a Maid.
D. Don't scorn, thy Youth, like Dreams, will quickly fade.
S. The Grapes to Raisins turning still are priz'd;
Nor is the Rose, tho' wither'd, soon despis'd.
D. Come to these Shades, I've Tales ne'er told before.
S. Once your sweet Tongue deceiv'd, I'll trust no more.
D. Go with me to those Elms, and hear my Flute.
S. Pipe by thy self, I hate so harsh a Note.
D. Let Fear of Venus Anger seize thy Mind.
S. A Fig for Venus, if Diana's kind.
D. Ah, speak not thus, lest she should fix her Chain,
The Noose is strong, and you may strive in vain.
S. Aye, let her do't, I live Diana's Care,
And she shall quickly free me from her Snare;
Hands off, rude Swain, I vow I'll scratch, forbear. }
D. You must not 'scape, no Maide'er 'scap'd Love's Stroke.
S. I'll 'scape, by Pan, but thou shalt bear his Yoke.
D. To meaner Swains, I fear, you will be kind.
S. Many have woo'd, none yet e'er pleas'd my Mind.

- D. And I am one that woo, and would obtain.
 S. What shall I do ? Marriage is full of Pain.
 D. Not Grief and Pain, but Joy attends the Bed.
 S. Sure I have heard that Wives their Husbands dread.
 D. No, no, they rule, for what should Women fear ?
 S. Child-birth is hard, and I'm afraid to bear.
 D. No Fear, o'er that thy own Diana reigns,
 And gives a speedy Ease to Mother's Pains.
 S. Yet I'm afraid, should many Births prevail,
 My Beauty fades, and then your Love may fail.
 D. Yet should you bear fine Boys, a happy Wife !
 How would you look into a future Life !
 S. But come, what Joynture, Swain, if I should yield ?
 D. My Flocks, my Herds, my Woods, and all my Field.
 S. Swear then, lest when enjoy'd, you false should prove.
 D. Never, by Pan, if you'll consent to love.
 S. Will you a Bed, a House, and Meat provide ?
 D. All this shall be the Dowry of my Bride ;
 Look, all these Flocks are mine, I'll still be true,
 And promise you no more than I can do.
 S. What shall I say, when my old Friends shall blame ?
 D. They'll like the Marriage, when they hear my Name.
 S. Then tell thy Name ; for Names do often please.
 D. Daphnis, my Father's Joy, and Mother's Ease :
 His Name is Lycidas, the noble Swain ;
 Her's Neme, once the Beauty of the Plain.
 S. Thy Race is noble, but yet mine's as good.
 D. But no Ways better ; for in yonder Wood
Menalcus lives, the Fountain of thy Blood.
 S. Shew me thy Grove, and where thy Sheep-coat lyes.
 D. These are my Trees, look how my Cypress rise.
 S. Feed Goats, whilst I attend the Herd-man's Love.
 D. Feed Bulls, I go to shew the Maid my Grove.
 S. Rude Swain, what means your Hand upon my Breast ?
 D. The Cluster's ripe, and fuing to be press'd.
 Those I must pluck ; oh ! with what Heat they move !
 And how they rise at ev'ry Touch of Love !
 S. I quake, pull out your Hand, rude Swain, forbear.
 D. Cheer up, no Harm, how timorous is my Dear !

S. 'Tis

S. 'Tis dirty, ah ! look there, 'twill stain my Gown,
And tell my jealous Friends what I have done.

D. I'll spread my Jerkin, 'tis a scurvy Place,
But I'm content to pay for the Embrace.

S. Forbear, we shall be caught, I hear a Noise.

D. 'Tis nought but Trees that murmur at our Joys.

S. You tear my Coat, ah me ! I am undone.

D. I'll buy a finer, and a better Gown.

S. You promise all Things now ; but when enjoy'd,
What wilt thou give ? Love's gone when Lust is cloy'd.
You will deceive, you Men are all Deceit.

And we so willing to believe the Cheat.

D. O ! could I give my Soul, what Oaths can do,
I'll bind ; I must, I cannot but be true.

S. I yield, forgive, Diana, O ! forgive,
I liv'd thy Votary, but no more can live.

D. Pleas'd ! ravish'd ! O ! I'll kill in yonder Grove
A Steer to Venus, and a Bull to Love.

S. I'm Woman grown, who was a Maid before.

D. A teeming Woman, and a Maid no more.

Thus murmuring, they did their soft Heats improve,
And went, and knew the Mystery of Love.

She rose, and smil'd, and banish'd Modesty,
Regain'd her Seat, and sare upon her Eye ;
Yet secret Pleasure thro' her Looks appear'd,
And joyful Daphnis went, and fed his Herd.

IDYLLIUM XXV.

A short Account of the Death of Pentheus, the Theban King, whom his Mother and Aunts tore in Pieces for disturbing the Solemnities of Bacchus.

To Dr. DRING of Wadham-College.

IN O, the fierce Autonoe, and the fair
Agave, three Thyrse to the Hills did bear,
 In Number three; they pluck'd wild Oaks and Bays;
 And in plain Fields did twelve green Altars raise;
 With Ivy shaded, and adorn'd with Vine,
 Fair Semele had three, and Bacchus nine;
Bacchus, the Womens God, and Mens Delight,
 These take at Day, and those receive at Night.
 From Baskets then those sacred Gifts they made,
 They gladly took, and on the Altar laid
 Mysterious Gifts, to please the wond'rous God,
 And honour him the Way that he had show'd.
 Young Pentheus lay in shady Hills conceal'd,
 And from the Rock the wond'rous Rites beheld;
Autonoe 'spy'd him first, and cry'd aloud,
 See there the great Contemner of the God;
 And out she ran, and as she went, o'erthrew
 The sacred Rites, which no Profane must view.
 She first grew mad, then all the rest were fir'd,
 Their Fury rose as high as Rage inspir'd.
 Young Pentheus fled, when he their Madness view'd,
 They tuck'd their Coats, and eagerly persui'd.
 He cry'd, What mean the Women? Oh! forbear.
 Wretch, you shall feel, they answer'd, e'er you hear.

His

His Mother seiz'd, and snatch'd his Head away,
 And like a Tygres grumbl'd o'er her Prey;
 Ino stamp'd on his Breast, his Arm she tore,
 And fierce Autonoe reek'd with Royal Gore;
 Others seiz'd other Limbs, each snatch'd a Part,
 And ev'ry Hand reach'd forward to his Heart.
 This done, they shouted, and ran madly down,
 And bore the bloody Trophies to the Town,
 Deserv'd: Let none his mighty Pow'r offend,
 Lest greater Mischiefs, and vast Pains attend;
 Let me be good, let me the Just approve,
 For this is pleasing, and the Care of Jove:
 For pious Fathers on their Sons derive Sure Blessings, which the Impious cannot give;
 They live themselves still vex'd with sharp Remorse,
 And leave a long hereditary Curse.
 Hail, Bacchus, hail, whom snatch'd from Destiny
 Great Jove secur'd, and foster'd in his Thigh.
 Hail, Semele, and all his Sisters, hail,
 Whose Fame resounds thro' ev'ry Grecian Vale.
 Their Act was just, that did reward the Sin,
 They shew'd the Vor'ry, and put off the Kin.
 Take Heed, Profane, by this Example show'd,
 For what the Gods inspire, must needs be good.

IDYLLIUM XXVI.

*****

Advice to a Friend to be constant in his Love.

To CHARLES VINER, of Wadham-College, Esq;

WIne, Friend, and Truth, the Proverb says, agree,
 And now I'm heated, take this Truth from me;
 The

The Secrets that lay deep, and hid before,
 Now rais'd by Wine, swim up, and bubble o'er;
 Then take this rising Truth, I can't controul,
Thou dost not love me, Youth, with all thy Soul.
 I know it, for this half of Life I boast,
 I have from you, the other half is lost.
 Whene'er you smile, I rival Gods above,
 Grown perfect, and exalted by thy Love;
 But when you frown, and when Dislike you show,
 I sink to Hell, more curs'd than all below;
 Yet how can this with common Sense agree
 To torture one that loves, and dies for thee?
 But, Youth, could my Advice thy Thoughts engage,
 Mine, who have learn'd Experience by my Age;
 The Counsel's good, and when a num'rous Store
 Of Blessings crown thee, thou wilt praise me more.
 On one Tree build one Nest, and build it strong,
 Where no fierce Snake can creep, and seize thy Young;
 Now here you stand, and suddenly are gone,
 You leap from Bough to Bough, and fix on none.
 If any views thy Beauty, and commends,
 You straight enrol him 'midst your ancient Friends;
 Whilst all your old Acquaintance laid aside;
 Dear Youth, this smells of Vanity and Pride.
 Love one, your Equal, love whilst Life remains,
 This pleases all, and Commendation gains;
 By this your Passion will but light appear,
 Which conquers all, and all are forc'd to bear.
 Love seizes all, and doth all Minds controul;
 It melts the stubborn Temper of my Soul.
 But O! I must embrace, Dear, grant one Kiss,
 And thus reward, and practise my Advice.

IDYLLIUM XXVII.

The Boar that kill'd Adonis, is brought before Venus.

To WILLIAM KENRICK, of Wadham-College, E/q.

When Venus saw Adonis dead,
 His Cheeks all pale, and Beauty fled;
 His Hair grown stiff with clotted Gore,
 And now to be belov'd no more;
 She had her Cupids trace the Grove,
 And bring the Boar that kill'd her Love.
 They, quick as the Command, ran o'er
 The Wood, and found the hated Boar;
 They seiz'd, and bound, strong Cords they twin'd,
 Some drew before, some drove behind;
 One twirl'd his Tail to make him go,
 Another lash'd him with his Bow.
 The fearful Beast went trembling on,
 As conscious of the Deed he'd done;
 His hanging Looks his Guilt betray'd,
 Of Venus Fury much afraid.
 When come, her Rage these Words express,
 Thou vilest Monster of a Beast,
 Were these the cruel Tusks did tear?
 Wast thou the Ruin of my Dear?
 The Boar reply'd, By thee, thy Love;
 By all that's kind, and apt to move;
 By what I suffer, by these Chains,
 And these that drive me to my Pains,

I ne'er had a Design to kill
 Thy Fair, it was against my Will :
 But when I saw his naked Thigh,
 As white as polish'd Ivory,
 How did my Flame and Fury rise !
 How was I fir'd at the Surprise !
 At last, unable to resist,
 Ah, me ! too furiously I kist ;
 And this the Boy's Destruction brought,
 And Love betray'd me to a Fault.
 These Tusks destroy, and punish these,
 The curs'd Disturbers of thy Ease ;
 For why should I have Leave to prove
 These Tusks, that have no Use in Love ?
 Or, if the Crime demands no less,
 These Lips I offer to appease.
 These Words, so movingly express,
 Calm'd all the Fury of her Breast ;
 She soon forgave, releas'd her Foe,
 And bad her Cupids let him go ;
 But he ne'er sought the Woods again,
 But staid attending on her Train,
 And to the Funeral Pile he came,
 And burnt his Tusks in the devouring Flame.

IDYLLIUM XXVIII.

He presents a Diſtaff to Theeugnis his Friend, Nicias's Wife.

To Mr. CHARLES WHITEING, of Wadham-College.

Distaſſ, thou greateſt Gift on Man beſtow'd,
 By fair Minerva, as the chiefſt Good,
Whom

Whom wise and thrifty Women still retain,
 And raise their Husband's Fortune by their Pain;
 Retire with me to Nile's beauteous Town,
 Where stately Shrines grace Venus and her Son;
 For thither, Disbuff, I am now design'd,
 And beg of mighty Jove a prosp'rous Wind:
 For my dear Friend and self my Pray'rs employ'd,
 Wish to enjoy, and be by Turns enjoy'd.
Nicias, in whom the sweet-tongu'd Graces rest,
Learning it self is seated in his Breast;
 There thou, of polish'd Iv'ry fram'd, shalt prove
 A grateful Present to his dearest Love:
 From thee shall all her Husband's Vests be spun;
 From thee she'll often draw a flow'ry Gown;
 For Lambs do loose their Fleeces twice a Year,
 To fill her Baskets, and be wrought by her.
 So painful is Theeugnis, what the wife
 And thrifty Matrons value, she will prize:
 Nor would I send thee to an idle Place,
 Thou Product of our Country, and our Grace;
 For thou wer't made where Walls stout Archias fram'd,
 The Pride of Sicily, for Valour fam'd.
 Now thou shalt visit him, whose wond'rous Skill
 Can save the Men that Fate designs to kill;
 Whose Herbs can soon restore a Life when lost,
 And by his Art bring back the flying Ghost;
 That fair Theeugnis may by all be known
 To have the neatest Distaff in the Town;
 And still of me, her Friend, kind Thoughts infuse,
 Of me, the chiefest Darling of the Muse.
 There some shall see thee, and these Words repeat,
 The Present's small, but yet the Kindness great;
 The Giver's Love doth little Gifts commend,
 And ev'ry Thing is valu'd from a Friend.

IDYLLIUM XXIX.

Hercules going to Augias, meets a Herds-man, of whom he asks the usual Questions which a Stranger makes, and receives Satisfaction, and is afterwards brought to the King and his Son Phyleus, who were then in the Fields. By those he is invited to the Town, and in the Way tells Phyleus how he had kill'd the Nemean Lyon.

To Mr. THOMAS PIGGOT, of Wadham-College.

Imperfect in the Greek.

AND then the Herds-man, from his lab'ring Hand,
He threw his Work, thus answer'd his Demand,
I'll gladly tell whate'er thy Mind desires ;
This Justice craves, and Minerva requires ;
For he, of all the Gods, respects it most,
When we deny a Stranger what is just.
Look, Stranger, all the num'rous Herds around,
With which the Vales are fill'd, and Hills are crown'd,
King Augias owns ; o'er thousand Plains they spread,
In diff'rent Meads, and various Pastures fed ;
Some on the flow'ry Banks of Eli stray,
And some where smooth Alpheus eats his Way ;
Some 'midst the Vines, in fair Amprassus go ;
Some here, the Vallies tremble when they low.
For each of these the King fair Stalls hath rear'd,
Tho' num'rous, large, and equal to the Herd ;
And here fresh Grass still cloths the fruitful Plain ;
The Blades, as soon as crop'd, arise again ;
For Springs cut thro' the Plain, and feed the Grass,
All fit to fatten Oxen, and increase.

Look,

Look, on thy right Hand, far beyond the Flood,
The Stall appears between the shady Wood,
Next, where high Planes, and where avild Olives grow,
Apoll's Shrine, to whom the Herds-men bow,
And own the greatest Deity below.

Next are the Farmers Stalls, whose Labours bring Whole Streams of Gain, and much enrich the King;
For thrice they plough, thrice sow the teeming Soil,
Which still invites, and still rewards their Toil.

Many large Vineyards plant, his Vines they dress,
And sweary Autumn treads the flowing Press;
For all these Gardens, Fields, and Plains around,
Till yonder warry Hills, the Compass bound,
King Augias owns, and here all Day we bear
The Heat and Cold, and urge the weighry Share.

Bur, Sir, (for I no common Aid may prove)
What Bus'ness led you to this happy Grove?
Would you the King, or any Servant see,
I can direct you, you shall learn from me;
For sure you seem, if well I mark your Face,
Great in your self, and noble in your Race.
How brave you look! and what a Port you bear!
So look the Sons of Gods when they appear.

This said, he bow'd, and Jove's stout Son reply'd,
Swain, gen'rous, free from Savageness or Pride,
I seek the King whom all these Realms obey;
Bus'ness with him first drew my Feet this Way.
If 'midst his Subjects now he keeps the Town,
Dispensing Justice from his equal Throne,
Give me a Swain to guide, a Master Swain,
Who, when I ask, can answer me again;
For Man is made to be a Help to Man.

Thus spake Alcides, thus the Swain reply'd,
Sir, all the Way some God your Feet must guide;
So luckily Things happen, so conspire
To please your Mind, and answer your Desire.
Last Night King Augias, and his valiant Son,
Young Phylens, left the Hurry of the Town;

They came to spend some Days 'midst peaceful Swains,
 And view their wond'rous Riches on the Plains.
 This Pains some Princes take, they leave their Ease,
 For when they watch themselves, their Stores increase.
 When with Heav'n's Providence they join their own,
 A double Guard secures their safer Throne.
 But come, let's go, and both the Prince attend
 In yonder Stall, he'll love so great a Friend.

This said, he hasten'd to conduct his Guest,
 His Wonder still at ev'ry Step increas't ;
 His Lyon's Skin, vast Club, his Mein and Face,
 Still heighten'd, still he wonder'd what he was ;
 Oft he would ask, but yet as oft repress't
 The rising Question in his troubled Breast,
 Lest it should seem too rude, and ill-design'd ;
 For, O! 'tis hard to know another's Mind.
 Whilst yet far off, the faithful Mastiff's knew
 The Noise and Smell of both, and out they flew ;
 From ev'ry Part they at the Hero run
 With open Mouths, resolv'd to tear him down ;
 But round the Swain they wagg'd their Tails, and play'd,
 And in hoarse Murmurs savage Joy betray'd.
 He stoop'd to take up Stones, they stop'd their Noise,
 He spoke, they fear'd the Thunder of his Voice :
 All silent fled, but yet the Swain was glad
 To see his Mastiff's Care, and thus he said,
 What useful Creatures are these Dogs to Man !
 How full of Care ! how useful to a Swain !
 Had they but Reason to know whom to tear,
 And whom to love, what Creature could compare !
 But now they're brutish, then he cry'd, Be gone,
 Each took his Stall, and lay in Quiet down.

Now down the West, with a descending Ray,
 Bright Phœbus drove, and bore declining Day.
 Now Shades drew on, and full of Milk and Food,
 The Sheep came Home, and lay and chew'd the Cud.
 Next these, the Cows and Oxen fill'd the Plain,
 As thick as Clouds when Jove descends in Rain :

When

When watry South-Winds bring their Treasures forth;
 Or when they're huddled by the stormy North,
 No Man can count them, for so fast they rise,
 And follow one another thro' the Skies;
 Still new and new the driving Tempest brings,
 And bears vast Burthens on his weary Wings.
 These Herds a Herds-man drove; the Fields and Road
 Were fill'd, the Vallies sounded when they low'd.
 The Stalls were crowded, and could scarce contain,
 And Sheep lay round, and bleated o'er the Plain.
 Tho' thousand Slaves stood round of ev'ry Kind,
 None wanted Work, all had their Tasks assign'd.
 One shackled flaring Cows, and whilst they stood
 He milk'd, and height the largest Pail o'erflow'd.
 One let the Calves to suck, they soon were fill'd
 With sweetest Milk, such Stores the Cows did yield.
 Some bore the Pails, and some did run the Cheese
 Hot from the Cow; some rais'd the Wring to squeeze;
 And some the Bulls apart from Heifers drove,
 They turn'd and bellow'd, eager on their Love.
 The King himself went round to ev'ry Herd,
 To see what Calves his Servants Care had rear'd;
 And whilst thro' his vast Stores he trac'd the Plain,
 His Son and great Alcides made his Train.

Here, tho' our Hero's Soul great Shews despis'd,
 Was constant, fix'd, too brave to be surpris'd;
 Yet now, at last, his Wonder rose to view
 Such num'rous Herds, and scarce could think 'twas true,
 That one such Stores should have, which could suffice
 Ten Kings, and fill capacious Avarice.
 But this was a peculiar Favour shown,
 A Blessing sent by Phœbus on his Son;
 His Cattle still must thrive, his Herds be blest'd,
 And Heav'n secur'd what'er the King possess'd.
 His Cows ne'er cast their Calves, and no Disease,
 The Herds-man's Plague, was e'er allow'd to seize.
 From Year to Year the num'rous Herd increas'd,
 New Calves were rear'd, and still the last were best.

Three hundred Bulls, turn'd Horns grace ev'ry Head;
 Their Legs were White, with these two hundred Red;
 All leap'd the Cows, begot a num'rous Race,
 And soon supply'd frail Nature's Chance-decays.
 Apart from these, twelve mighty Bulls did run,
 As white as Snow, and sacred to the Sun;
 Each with his Shape might tempt the Tyrian Queen;
 They fed, were pleas'd, and wanton'd o'er the Green;
 And when fierce Lyons from the Woods appear'd,
 They turn'd to fight; and still secur'd the Herd;
 They bellow'd loud, they tore the trembling Ground;
 And with bent Fore-heads, aim'd a double Wound.

'Midst these, one Bull did far excel the rest,

Call'd Phaeton, a stout and mighty Beast.

This Name the Herds-man gave, deduc'd from Light;
 For his quick Courage, and his Strength in Fight;
 He all excell'd, was stately, valiant, fair,
 As much as Phaeton the meanest Star.

The Lyon's Skin that o'er the Hero spread,
 As soon as first he saw, he bent his Head,
 And ran to push, he quickly shunn'd the Wound,
 His left Horn grasp'd, and pull'd him to the Ground;
 In vain he strove, in vain he spurn'd the Sand,
 With doubled Strength the Hero fix'd his Hand;
 Then urg'd his Breast, and forc'd the Bull to rear
 On high, and held him beating in the Air.

The King, his valiant Son, and all the Plain
 Admir'd his Strength, and thought him more than Man.

The Prince and Hero, now dark Shades grew on,
 The Meadows left, and hasten'd to the Town.
 They took a Path, which, from the distant Stall,
 Thro' Vineyards led, and thro' a pleasing Vale;
 'Twas little beaten, thro' a shady Grove,
 A soft and cool Retreat for happy Love;
 No heavy Clowns came there, whose weighty Tread
 Might spoil the Verdure of the Grassy Bed;
 And as they walk'd with a Majestick Look,
 Young Phyleus turn'd his Head, and thus he spoke:

Sir,

Sir, if I guess aright, your sounding Fame
 Hath reach'd my Ears, tho' not reveal'd your Name;
 For one an Argive, valiant, stout, and young,
 From Aelis came, and pleas'd the list'ning Throng.
 He said, whilst he was there, and vow'd 'twas true,
 A valiant Greek a furious Lyon slew,
 Strong, cruel, bloody, that destroy'd the Swains,
 The fierce Nemean Terror of the Plains.
 But whether Argos his great Birth could boast,
 Or Sparta gave, my Mem'ry now has lost.
 But yet he said, tho' I forget the Place,
 For that I mind, he was of Persian Race:
 You, Sir, I hope are he, the Man that fought;
 This Skin proclaims as much, and clears my Doubt:
 But pray inform me, 'twill afford Delight,
 And please me much, if I conjecture right:
 Tell me if you are He, the Brave, the Bold,
 Of whom the Argive's wond'rous Tale was told:
 Tell how the Lyon fell, what Strokes he stood,
 And how he came to the Nemean Wood;
 For did you seek it, you would seek in vain
 For such a Monster on the Grecian Plain;
 She breeds no such, the Bear, the Wolf, and Boar,
 Unlucky Beasts she breeds, and breeds no more:
 Hence some admire, and some the Tale accuse,
 As if contriv'd to please, and to amuse.

This said, he bow'd, and stepp'd aside to shew
 The Path was large, and wide enough for two;
 He begg'd the Hero to advance more near,
 That they might speak with greater Ease, and hear:
 He soon came forward; and whilst Side by Side
 They walk'd, he to his Question thus reply'd.

Brave Angias Son, what'er the Prince hath said,
 Is right, and his Conjecture duly weigh'd;
 Yet I'll inform you how the Monster fell,
 And when it came; for very few can tell;
 But most imagine, 'twas design'dly sent
 To prove the base Pheronians Punishment.

Neglect

Neglect of Duty had provok'd a God:
 The poor Fishers, like a headlong Flood,
 He ravag'd o'er, and drown'd their Fields in Blood;
 But soon the Bambino felt his Rage,
 And linger'd on a miserable Age.
 This Task Euryshans, whom I must obey,
 Impos'd, and hop'd to see me prove the Lion's Prey;
 I took my Bow, my hollow Quiver bore
 Sharp Arrows, arm'd with the Lion's Gore;
 Whene'er I draw a Shaft, Deaths wait around
 To guide the Dart, and enter at the Wound.
 My left Hand grasp'd my Club, strong, knotty, rude,
 With all its Bark, unpolish'd from the Wood;
 It grew on Nelson, I pluck'd it thence
 With Roots and all, and weild for my Defence.
 Approaching to the Wood, I bent my Bow,
 My Arrow knock'd, and wish'd to meet my Foe;
 I look'd around, and try'd, prepar'd for Fight,
 To spy the Beast, and take Advantage of the Sight.
 'Twas Mid-day now, and yet no Beast appear'd,
 No Track was seen, nor any Roaring heard;
 No Herds-man Swain, that might his Den declare,
 All lay at Home chain'd up with slavish Fear:
 But still I trac'd the Groves, thro' Woods I press'd,
 Resolv'd at last to find and fight the Beast;
 For ev'ry Ev'ning glutted with the Blood
 Of slaughter'd Beasts, he took the shady Wood;
 His Mane was stiff with Gore, his grisly Beard
 His long Tongue lick'd, with Blood and Foam besmear'd.
 Behind a Thicket I impatient lay,
 And wish'd each Minute was the Close of Day,
 That I might see him. — Lo, at last he came
 In Look as dreadful as he was in Fame.
 I drew my Bow, and shot, the String did sound,
 And Death stood ready to attend the Wound;
 But from his Side the Shaft rebounding fell,
 And prov'd the harden'd Beast was arm'd too well.
 The Lion roar'd, he rais'd his furious Head,
 And look'd to see from whence the Arrow fled;

His.

His flaming Eyes shot Fire, unbreath'd his Paws,
 He gap'd, and Teeth look'd dreadful in his Jaws.
 I knock'd another Arrow, drew again,
 Enrag'd to see the former shot in vain;
 The Breast it struck, where Life maintains her Seat,
 And labouring Lungs still fan the vital Heat;
 But that in vain did from his Breast rebound,
 And rais'd his Fury, but it gave no Wound.
 A third I drew; but ere I aim'd aright,
 The Beast perceiv'd me, and prepar'd for Fight;
 His Tail twirl'd round, his Neck was swoln with Rage,
 And ev'ry Limb seem'd eager to engage;
 His Mane stood up, his fiery Eyes did glow,
 And crook'd Back was bent into a Bow.
 And as when Wheelers take a sturdy Oak,
 Or Elm, and bathe it in the glowing Smoak,
 To make a Wheel, at first it bends, and stands,
 And then at once leaps from their grasping Hands;
 So leap'd the Beast at me, such Springs as these
 He made, grown eager, and resolv'd to seize.
 But I receiv'd him, in my Left I held
 My Darts, and a thick Garment was my Shield,
 My Right did wield my Club, and aim'd a Blow,
 As he was leaping forward, at his Brow,
 A lucky Blow, but on the harden'd Bones
 It broke, the Lyon sigh'd in hollow Groans;
 Some Steps retir'd, as if all Sense was fled,
 And stood with shaking Legs, and dizzy Head;
 Mists seiz'd his Eyes, and an amazing Pain
 Ran thro' the crazy Vessels of his Brain.
 This I observ'd, and now an easy Prey,
 I threw my Quiver and my Shafts away,
 And seiz'd his Neck; and whilst his Sense was gone,
 I grip'd him hard, and kept the Lyon down;
 My Gripes I doubled, and behind I press'd,
 Lest his sharp Paws should tear my adverse Breast;
 On's hinder Feet I trod, and squeez'd his Thighs
 With mine, he spurn'd in vain, and strove to rise.

At

At last overcome, when he had shov'd in vain,
 He lay extended on the fatal Plain,
 I held him breathless, did his Force controul,
 And gaping Hell receiv'd his mighty Soul;
 Then next I sought how I might gain the Spoils,
 And with his precious Skin reward my Toils:
 The Task was hard, for neither Wood, nor Stone,
 Nor Steel, could pierce, and make the Skin my own.
 But then some God did happy Thoughts infuse,
 The Paws he shew'd, and taught me those to use:
 I did, and flea'd him, and the Hide I bear
 To be my strong Security in War.
 Thus fell the Beast, by which such Numbers fell,
 And fled, amid'st his slaughter'd Heaps, to Hell.

IDYLLIUM XXX.

The Fight between Amycus and Pollux. This Amycus being excellently well skill'd at Whirlbats, made a Decree, that whatever Stranger came into his Country, should fight with him; after he had slain a great many, Pollux at last overcomes him.

To Mr. ROBERT D'O'LY, of Wadham-College.

Fair Leda's Sons, and mighty Jove's I sing,
 Castor and Pollux, Glories of the Ring;
 None toss their Whirlbats with so brave a Force,
 None guide so well the Fury of their Horse;
 With trebled Songs I sing the glorious Two,
 The great Supports and Helps of Man below;
 When 'midst destructive Wars swift Dangers press,
 Or stormy Stars send Tempests o'er the Seas,

They

They toss the Floods, and raise the swelling Tide
 At Poop or Prow, and dash on either Side,
 Or pour into the Ship; the Planks and Masts
 Are torn, nor can the Sails endure the Blasts,
 But rent, hang useless; Storms of Hail and Rain
 From Heaven descend, and beat the spacious Main;
 The Waters roar, the troubled Ocean raves,
 Whilst Hail and stormy Winds upraise the Waves;
 Yet then you draw the Ship from deepest Seas,
 And those that look'd for Death, are cheer'd with Ease,
 The Clouds all fly, and Storms strict Silence keep,
 And a smooth Calmness spreads o'er all the Deep;
 Bright Stars appear, and with a beauteous Ray
 Preface good Voyages, and shew the Way;
 Great Helps to Man, of both my Muse must write,
 Both skill'd in Horses, Singing, and in Fight.
 But Muse, whose Praises must I first rehearse?
 Sing both, — first Pollux grace thy sounding Verse.

When Argo's Sails had 'scap'd the closing Shores,
 And swept cold Pontus with her nimble Oars,
 She touch'd Bebryca, forc'd by prosperous Fate,
 The Sons of Gods and Hero's were her Freight,
 And there they landed. When they came to land,
 Some rais'd Grass-beds, and, by their Lord's Command,
 Some dress'd their Meat upon the naked Sand. }
Castor and Pollux, weary of the Floods,
 Left all their Mates, and trac'd the shady Woods;
 And as they gaz'd, beneath a gloomy Cave
 They saw a Spring rowl on a pulsing Wave,
 Like Silver pure, and round on ev'ry Part,
 By Nature made, and not contriv'd by Art,
 Small Fountains flow'd, and bubbled o'er the Grass,
 As clear as Crystal, and as smooth as Glass.
 Tall Firs, and Planes, and Cypress, shade the Streams,
 Defending from the Fury of the Beams;
 The Banks were crown'd with Flowers, which Nature brings
 For Bees, and to embalm the dying Springs.

By

By this a Man in shining Armour sat,
 Frightful his Look, and terrible as Fate :
 His Face was full of Knobs, how large his Chest ?
 His Shoulders broad, and equal to his Breast :
 His Flesh like Brass, more hard the more he fought,
 Like a Colossus on an Anvil wrought.

And as tall Rocks that have long Time withstood
 The numerous Whirlings of a rapid Flood,
 At last grow round, but yet unconquer'd stand,
 So look'd the swelling Muscles on his Hand ;
 And o'er his Shoulders hung a Lyon's Skin,
 Clasp'd by the golden Paws beneath his Chin ;
 With some Surprise and Wonder in his Look,
 Brave Pollux view'd him, and at last he spoke.

P. Health, Sir, what Nations plough this happy Shore ?

A. How Health, when I see Men ne'er seen before ?

P. Fear not, we're honest, and no Danger's near.

A. I do not, nor need you bid me not fear.

P. Your Answer's rude, your Manners are untame,

A. What's that ? Sir, as you see me, such I am.

But what have you to do to tread these Shores,
 Did e'er I come to trouble you on yours ?

P. Sir, if you did, you should be entertain'd,
 Be grac'd with Gifts, and treated as a Friend.]

A. Talk not of Presents thus, thy Gifts I scorn,
 Nor have I any ready to return.

P. May I not taste the Streams that idly flow ?

A. If Thirst hath scorch'd thy Bowels, thou shalt know.

P. Here's Gold, I'll give you any Price to gain.

A. Then you must fight a single Man to Man ;

Set Foot to Foot, and steady Eyes advance,
 And use your greatest Skill, nor trust to Chance.

P. Whom must I fight with ? Must I beat the Air ?

A. Thy Match is ready, and thy Equal near.

P. And what's the Prize ? What must the Conqueror have ?

A. The conquer'd, Sir, shall be the Conqueror's Slave.

P. This is Cock's Sport, not fit for generous Men,
 Where the dull Dastard leaves the cackling Hen.

A. Or

A. Or Cocks, or Lyons, I'm resolv'd on this ;
I than my self can stake no worthier Prize.

This said, Amycus did his Trumpet sound,
The Vallies rung, and eccho'd all around,
Thro' every distant Field the Noise was heard,
And Crowds of stout Bebrycians soon appear'd :
Whilst from the Ship the thronging Heroes press,
To view the Fight, and judge of the Success ;
Now were their Whirlbats bound, rough Thongs em-brac'd

Their knotty Arms, and ty'd their Weapons fast :
Our they advanc'd, and each with Fury shook ;
They breath'd Defiance, Terror in their Look.
Here was a noble Strife of Art begun,
Who on his Back should gain the setting Sun ;
And Pollux gain'd it, the descending Rays
Shone full in mighty Amycus's Face.
Enrag'd at this, his headlong Fury rose,
And he rush'd on, and doubled all his Blows ;
But Pollux fous'd his Cheek, it flow'd with Gore,
He saw his Blood, and then he rag'd the more.
The Fight grew hotter, like a mighty Oak
He backward bent to take the greater Stroke ;
Shouts the Bebrycians gave, and rais'd his Heat ;
The Heroes cheer'd stout Pollux with as great ;
For they all fear'd, lest forc'd to narrow Streights,
Pollux should fall beneath the threaten'd Weights.
But he, with dext'rous Skill, and watchful Art,
Still shunn'd the Strokes, secure on ev'ry Part ;
He ply'd him hard, and did his Force controul ;
Tho' great his Courage, furious was his Soul.
Doz'd with the Strokes, the nodding Hero stood,
And from his Mouth flow'd Streams of clotted Blood.
The Grecians shouted, when they view'd the Blows,
And saw his broken Cheeks and batter'd Nose ;
His Eyes contracted in his swelling Face,
And by their Shoutings, doubled the Disgrace.
The Prince still eager press'd, he ply'd him hard,
And with false Strokes soon beat him from his Guard ;

By this Man in shining Armour seen,
 Frightful his Look, and terrible as Fate :
 His Face was full of Rubies, how large his Chest ?
 His Shoulders broad, and equal to his Breast :
 His Flesh like Brass, more hard the more he fought,
 Like a Colossus on an Anvil wrought.

And as tall Rocks that have long Time withstood
 The numerous Whirlings of a rapid Flood,

The Prince still eager press'd, he ply'd him hard,
And with false Strokes soon beat him from his Guard ;

And when he saw him staggering, aim'd a Blow;
 The Stroke was sure, and smote his haughty Brow:
 The Ball return'd as from a harden'd Stone,
 But tore the Flesh, and left the naked Bone.
 O'ercome by this, and yielding to the Wound,
 The Hero fell, and bit the bloody Ground;
 But rose, and then in fiercer Fight engag'd,
 By his disgraceful Wounds and Pains enrag'd.
 Both toss'd their Whirlbats, and vast Wounds bestow'd,
 With Blood and Sweat their labouring Bodies flow'd.
 Stout Amysus still aim'd at Hands and Breast,
 And with redoubled Force he bravely press'd;
 But wiser Pollux every fatal Blow
 Aim'd at his Head, and craz'd his nodding Brow;
 His Limbs grew less, his Colour turn'd to pale,
 And from a mighty Giant, shrunk to small:
 But Pollux seem'd to grow, he look'd more great,
 His Colour better, and increas'd by Heat.

But, Muse, how Pollux did the Hero quell,
 What Stroke he gave, explain, for you can tell;
 I sing as you direct, your Voice obey;
 And gladly follow, when you lead the Way.
 Designing now to push the Combat on,
 He seiz'd on Pollux left Hand with his own;
 Bending to shun the Stroke, and closing nigh
 Reach'd out his right, and grasp'd his brawny Thigh;
 But he his Body bow'd, and broke the Lock,
 And at his Temple aim'd a fatal Stroke,
 Just where the vital Powers their Seats maintain,
 And work new Spirits to support the Brain,
 There fell the Blow; wide gap'd the horrid Wound
 To let in Fate, and the vast Hero groan'd:
 The Blood sprang out, his Mouth his left Hand smote,
 And shatter'd Teeth fell down his batter'd Throat;
 His Cheeks were beaten close, his Nose grew flat,
 And trebled Blows still urg'd his hasty Fate.
 The Hero fell extended o'er the Plain,
 Gave o'er the Fight, nor could he rise again;

His

His Hands stretch'd out, as, whilst he breath'd his last,
He meant to keep off Fate that came too fast.
Here no proud Word, and no disdainful Strain
On thy fall'n Foe, did thy great Conquest stain ;
But he by his great Father Neptune swore,
That he would never injure Strangers more.

Thus have I Pollux sung, and paid my Due,
My next, great Castor, must be grac'd by you.

PART II.

Castor and Pollux had taken away Phæbe and Talaris, the Daughters of Lucippus, who were betroth'd to Lynceus and Idas, the Sons of Aphareus. A War ensuing, Castor kills Lynceus, and Idas is slain by Thunder.

NOW had the valiant Sons of mighty Jove
Grown fierce, and too injurious by their Love,
Lucippus Daughters seiz'd, and forc'd away
Their beauteous Prize, and melancholly Prey.
Aphareus Sons persu'd, resolv'd to try
Their Force, and gain their promis'd Brides, or die :
Both Sides now meet at brave Aphareus Tomb,
Which Fate design'd the Lovers Field of Doom ;
All from their Chariots leap, for Fight prepare,
Well arm'd, and well appointed for the War.
When Lynceus thus beneath his Helmet spoke,
The Vallies eccho'd, and the Mountains shook :
What means this Rage, this impious Violence,
To ravish first, then fight in its Defence ?
What mean the Shields and Spears, these Iron Bands,
And naked Weapons in your threat'ning Hands ?
Lucippus Daughters are by right our Due,
Betroth'd to us before e'er known to you ;
His Oaths confirm'd it, and 'twas base by Stealth
To covet others Right, and others Wealth ;

By Gifts to bribe him, and his Mind pervert,
 And win by Art, unable by Desert.
 And often I, your base Designs to check,
 Have said, tho' I can better fight than speak,
Unprincely 'tis to court another's Spouse,
And tempt weak Innocence to break her Vows :
Sparta and Elis breed a numerous Race,
 All perfect Beauties both in Mind and Face ;
 There you may court, and whom you please may have.
 What Parents will refuse the Rich and Brave ?
 Permit our Match, let us our Right pursue,
 And we will join to find fit Brides for you.
 These were my Words ; but these the wanton Winds
 Bore to the Floods, they never reach'd your Minds ;
 For both inexorably bent appear'd
 You heard, but ne'er regarded what you heard.
 Yet now be just, our promis'd Brides restore,
 For we are kin, and then I ask no more.
 But if you needs must fight, if War desire,
 If nought but Blood can quench your lustful Fire,
 Let Pollux, and let Idas Arms forbear,
 And never try the hated Chance of War :
 Let, Castor, you and I the Fight maintain,
 And see whose Courage shews the bravest Man ;
 For this will give our Friends sufficient Proof,
 And if one falls, there will be Loss enough :
 Let some survive to cheer our drooping Friends,
 And wed the Maids, and make them just Amends ;
 For this is friendly to restrain our Heat,
 And make the Loss but small, when the Contention's great.

Thus Lyncus spoke, to this both Sides agree,
 And Jove confirm'd it by his fix'd Decree ;
Pollux and Idas laid their Arms beside,
 Attending what their Brothers should decide.
Lyncus did first within the Lists appear,
 Beneath his Shield he shook his threat'ning Spear ;
 Then Castor came, strong Shields did guard their Breasts,
 And on their Helmets nodded dreadful Crests.

First

First with their Spears began the noble Strife,
 Each sought to find an open Pass to Life;
 But all in vain, the Shields the Strokes endur'd,
 Their Spears were blunted, and the Men secur'd;
 Their Swords they drew, the Blades like Lightning shone
 Before the Thunderbolt falls swiftly down.

Now rose their Fury, Castor bravely press'd,
 He pierc'd his Shield, and chop'd the waving Crest,
 And many Thrusts the quick-ey'd Lyncæus made;
 The Shield and Crest once felt his furious Blade.
 But Castor stepping backward, reach'd a Blow,
 And struck his Wrist, and tam'd his haughty Foe;
 Disabled thus, and grown unfit for Fight,
 He drop'd his Weapon, and prepar'd for Flight
 To his great Father's Tomb, where Idas sat,
 A sad Spectator of his Brother's Fate.
 But Castor soon persud, close Thrusts he made,
 And thro' his Belly forc'd his thund'ring Blade;
 Out rush'd his Bowels thro' the gaping Wound,
 And he fell forward on the shaking Ground.
 Cold Death came on, and did his Heart surprize,
 And Sleep eternal fate upon his Eyes.

Nor did his Mother valiant Idas lead
 With pious Wishes to his Marriage-bed;
 For to revenge fall'n Lyncæus hasty Doom,
 He tore a Pillar from the sacred Tomb,
 To dart at Castor, dreadfully he stood,
 The fierce Avenger of his Brother's Blood.
Jove interpos'd, and, by his strict Command,
 Swift Lightning struck the Marble from his Hand;
 He strove to reach it, but his Soul was fir'd,
 He fell, and in no common Destiny expir'd.
 Thus must the Brothers still victorious prove,
 So great in Courage, and ally'd to Jove.

Hail, Leda's Sons, still vigorous Strength infuse,
 And still preserve the Honour of my Muse;
 You, Helen, and the valiant Brave, that strove
 At Troy for injur'd Menelaus Love,

Poets have serv'd, for with exalted Rage
 They tell your Fame, and spread thro' future Age;
Homer hath rais'd it with a lofty Thought,
 He writes with the same Spirit that you fought;
 He sings the Grecian Fleet, grave Nestor's Care,
 And brave Achilles, Fortress of the War.
 I bring the Tribute of a meaner Muse,
 Those humble Strains her sparing Heats infuse;
 Yet this is all, the best that I can do,
 The utmost that my Talent will allow;
 And to the Gods, let Riches vainly strive,
 Verse is the greatest Present Men can give.

THEOCRITUS.

Now first made English from the Original GREEK, by several Hands.

On the Statue of ARCHILOCHUS.

STay, Traveller, Archilochus behold,
 Who in Jambicks wrote of old,
 Whose Glory and Renown has run
 Down from the rising to the setting Sun.
 Him surely Phœbus and the Nine admir'd,
 And with their double Art inspir'd;
 For the divine Musician play'd
 To his soft Lute, Songs which the Poet made.

On the Statue of ANACREON.

Stranger, survey this Statue with Concern,
 And when at Home you shall return,
 Say, That at Teos you have lately been,
 And there Anacreon's Image seen.
 Say, That of Lyrics, who before him sung,
 No Poet had a sweeter Tongue.
 And if you say, that Youths were his Delight,
 You draw the Man compleatly right.

On the Poet HIPPONAX, the Satyrift.

THE Poet Hipponax lies here ;
 If you are bad, the Tomb revere,
 Which does his Ashes keep :
 But if you're just, and good, you may
 Secure and unmolested stay,
 And, if it please you, sleep.

On the Tomb of EURYMEDON.

THIS Tomb contains thee, good Eurymedon,
 Who dying young, hast left a youthful Son ;
 Thou with the Deities above art plac'd,
 And he with future Honours shall be grac'd.
 This on the Son his Country shall bestow,
 Mindful how much they to the Father owe.

On the same.

Stranger, dost thou an equal Honour pay
 To the polluted Dust, and pious Clay ?
 Happy this Tomb, thy honest Tongue replies,
 For here Eurymedon the Virtuous lies ;

And

And light the Mould, and soft the Dust is spread
On the pure Heart, and the religious Heart.

On the Statue of PISANDER, who wrote the Labours of HERCULES in Verse.

THIS Man, who from Camirus sprung,
Pisander, first of Poets, sung;
The Monster-taming Son of Jove
Extoll'd him to the Gods above;
And wrote with as divine a Thought,
His Labours, as the Hero fought.
The grateful People, to revive
His Fame, and keep his Name alive,
This brazen Statue rais'd, which might
The Wrath of Time and Tempests slight;
That to late Ages might be known
The Poet's Merit, and their own.

On a Statue dedicated to the Muses by XENOCLES, the Musician.

Aonian Nine, to your immortal Praise,
This grateful Statue Xenocles did raise;
The World will say, that he has wisely done,
Who by his tuneful Art such Fame has won.
Could a Musician a less Off'ring bring
To them who taught him how to Play and Sing?

On the Death of ORTHON, who dy'd Drunk.

Stranger, observe the Lesson Orthon gave,
Which still is echo'd from his hollow Grave.
If Drunk, you can no longer walk upright,
No Journey take on a dark Winter Night.
For such my Fate, when travelling Abroad,
I chanc'd to stagger, and had got my Load;

Far from my Country where I took my Birth,
Now to lie cover'd under foreign Earth.

On the Statue of VENUS the Cœlestial.

N O vulgar Venus this, which here is plac'd,
(The Present of Chryfogona the Chast)
Who lives in Amphicles's House, with whom
All Things are common in a single Room.
'Thou, O Cœlestial Venus ! art their Care ;
To thee each Year they make their early Pray'r ;
Each Year for that alone they better fame.
For while poor Mortals do the Gods regard,
The Gods on Mortals double the Reward.

Upon EUSTHENES, the Physiognomist. *

T HIS Tomb encloses Eusthenes the Wise,
A Sage, who Nature trac'd thro' each Disguise,
And saw the Soul conspicuous in the Eyes.
To him his Friends and Fellow-strangers gave,
In foreign Earth, this honourable Grave :
They lov'd their Friend, and lov'd his Poet too,
And pay'd the dead Philosopher his Due,
Who could not aid himself, yet found an Aid
In these his Friends, who Honour thus his Shade.
